Articles 1 and 2. Implementation of an active employment policy. The Government indicates that the unemployment rates increased between 2007 and 2010 from 3.9 per cent to 5.4 per cent for men and from 3.7 per cent to 4.6 per cent for women. The rates slightly decreased to 5 per cent for men and to 4.2 per cent for women in April 2011 despite the March 2011 Great East Japan earthquake. The Government indicates that in the fiscal year (FY) 2010, the measures aimed at promoting employment launched in 2009, which include the Hometown Employment Reactivation Special Grant and the Emergency Employment Creation Project, continue to be implemented. Active labour market measures implemented focused on, inter alia, reducing the requirements for employment adjustment subsidies to support continued employment. Moreover, measures are being implemented to provide training opportunities to jobseekers who have limited opportunities to find employment. These measures include the review of the job card system in April 2011 and the implementation of a support system for jobseekers in October 2011 under the Jobseekers Support Act. This system aims at subsidizing vocational training of jobseekers. The Government indicates that in response to the earthquake, the project on job creation in priority areas is projected to be expanded for reconstruction of the affected region. The creation of approximately 20,000 jobs is planned, particularly through the abovementioned project. Moreover, the "Japan as One Work Project" has been developed. This entails the creation of employment through construction projects, the expansion of subsidies for enterprises that recruit disaster victims, employment support through on-site job counselling and the broadening of both employment adjustment subsidies and benefits of employment insurance to ensure continued employment and secure daily lives of disaster victims. The Committee notes that the GDP growth was expected to slow down to 0.7 per cent in 2011 before rising to 2.9 per cent in 2012. The recovery is expected to continue in 2012 as the resumption of exports increases domestic demand and reconstruction spending continues. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the impact of the measures taken to promote full employment within a framework of a coordinated economic and social policy, including data on the employment levels of those who have been affected by the earthquake.

Workers affected by the postal privatization. In its remarks of October 2010, YUSANRO indicated that due to a cutback in personnel costs, the number of non-regular workers of the Japan Post Group had increased by 15,000, while regular workers were reduced by 6,000 over two years after the 2007 postal privatization. In its comments of June 2012, YUSANRO indicates that out of 208,604 fixed-term workers in the Post Group, approximately 121,000 have been employed for more than three years. It further indicates that in February 2010, the Government drafted a Postal Reform Plan, which envisaged improving the working conditions of the high number of non-regular workers in the postal services and recruiting 100,000 full-time employees. Subsequently, the Post Group companies announced a recruitment plan, according to which workers fulfilling requirements concerning the duration of service (at least three years), hours of work (more than 20 hours per week) and age (less than 60 years old) were eligible for taking a test for their promotion to regular workers. The Post Group determined that 65,000 non-regular workers were eligible for the test. However, only some 9,500 workers passed the test in 2010 and 2011. YUSANRO points out that fixed-term workers have performed their job for many years as full-time workers. Therefore, they are experienced and their capability has been tested, but they have not gained employment security. It also indicates that the Japan Post Service company did not implement the promotion of fixed-term workers to regular workers in FY 2011 and postponed it until June 2012. Moreover, in September 2011, the Japan Post Service company terminated the employment of 13,694 fixed-term workers. YUSANRO indicates that a review of the postal privatization should target the equal treatment of non-regular workers and their promotion to full-time regular employees. YUSANRO also indicates that no consultations were held with the social partners concerning employment policies in the postal sector. Therefore, it is necessary to hold consultations between the Government and the employers' and workers' representatives of the postal sector to develop policies for full employment. In its report received in October 2011, the Government indicates that generally speaking it recognizes that it is important that employers give consideration to the conditions of employment of their employees. However, it stresses that the employment of non-regular workers in the Post Group companies, which are private firms, should be determined by their business management. The Committee requests the Government to provide in its next report information on the impact that the privatization in the postal sector has had on the labour market. It would also appreciate receiving information on how the contracts used in the postal sector have contributed effectively to productive employment rather than to the redistribution, on less secure conditions, of existing jobs.

Non-regular workers. In its observations of September 2011, ZENROREN indicates that the Government failed to take appropriate measures for correcting the deteriorating situation which non-regular workers, comprising fixed-term workers, part-time workers, contract workers and workers employed by temporary employment agencies, are obliged to accept. Non-regular workers are the first to lose their jobs when the economy takes a downturn. Therefore, non-regular workers are more likely to fall into underemployment and long-term unemployment. A large number of non-regular workers lost their jobs following the March 2011 earthquake. Nevertheless, the situation in which replaceable workers are engaged in the same jobs has been a practice for companies in Japan. Not only wages and working conditions of non-regular workers are unequal to those of regular workers, but also these workers hardly obtain regular employment status and are excluded from social security coverage, especially unemployment benefits. The insufficient system of income support and vocational training in case of termination of employment causes non-regular workers to work in undesirable jobs, thereby restricting their freedom of choice of employment. ZENROREN further indicates that, following the reforms adopted since the late 1990s and the repeated revisions of labour laws, employers are encouraged to employ more non-regular workers. However, no regulations and monitoring system exist to correct adverse effects caused by those changes. In its remarks of June 2012, YUSANRO also expresses its concern that major corporations are replacing more of their full-time employees with casual workers, such as temporary agency workers and independent contractors. Major corporations have cut jobs and limited wage increases allegedly in order to deal with the adverse impact of the earthquake. The Government indicates that equal and balanced treatment for part-time workers has been promoted under the revised Part-Time Workers Law. This legislation prohibits, in principle, business operators to discriminate against part-time workers in terms of wages and other treatments. Subsidies are provided to those businesses that promote an equal treatment for fixed-term and part-time workers. The Labour Policy Council has discussed rules for fixed-term employment contracts. The Committee observes that non-regular workers make up more than one third of total employment. In its General Survey of 2010 concerning employment instruments, the Committee also noted that in Japan there has been increasing labour market dualism arising from a decline in the prevalence of the lifelong employment system (paragraph 576). The Committee recalls its 2010 observation, in which it noted the rising unemployment among non-regular workers following the economic slowdown. The Committee requests the Government to provide in its next report detailed information on the measures implemented in consultation with the social partners to reduce labour market dualism and on how these measures have concretely translated into productive and lasting employment opportunities for non-regular workers.

Employment of women. In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government indicates that the total number of women employed increased to 23.29 million in 2010 with women's share in the total number of employed at 42.6 per cent. The revised Childcare and Family Care Leave Law, which obliges employers to establish a system providing for short working hours and overtime exemption and to expand the childcare leave system, came into force in June 2010. In FY 2010, the number of consultations regarding the Law doubled compared to the previous year to 143,000. Regarding the career-tracking system, the Government indicates that in order not to make the career-tracking system gender biased, a fixed number of enterprises introducing the career-tracking system are provided systematic guidance by prefectural labour offices pursuant to the Equal Employment Opportunity Law. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the impact of policies and measures taken to promote women's employment and equal employment opportunities for women and men. Please also provide information, including statistics, on the effect that the initiatives taken have had on dismantling the gender-based career-tracking system to ensure that there is freedom of choice of employment and that each worker shall have the fullest possible opportunity to qualify for and use his or her skills, in the conditions set out in Article 1(2)(c) of the Convention.

Youth employment. The Government indicates that it continued to implement measures to promote the employment of new graduates, such as doubling the number of employment service staff providing job support to new graduates, establishing the New Graduate Support Hello Work and providing for subsidies to enterprises hiring young persons within three years after their graduation. The Government further indicates that as a result of the freeters Regular Employment Promotion Plan, 304,000 freeters, i.e. young people in temporary or part-time jobs, were regularly employed. The Committee notes that the unemployment rate among young persons between 15–24 years increased from 7.7 per cent in January 2011 to 9.5 per cent in April 2011. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures implemented in terms of generating productive and lasting employment opportunities for young workers.

Older workers. The Committee notes JTUC–RENGO's observation that as of 1 June 2010, 3.4 per cent of enterprises with 31 or more workers have not yet implemented any employment security measures for the elderly. In JTUC–RENGO's view, government guidance to companies that have not implemented measures for employment of the elderly is not strong enough to enforce the Elderly Employment Stabilization Law. The Government indicates that the entire system regarding elderly employment policies is to be reviewed within the Labour Policy Council in order to, inter alia, strengthen the enforcement of the Elderly Employment Stabilization Law. The Government also indicates that various subsidies are provided to businesses to encourage them to take employment security measures for older workers and provide them with employment opportunities. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report data which will allow it to assess the effectiveness of the measures implemented to promote productive employment opportunities for older workers.

The Liaison Council of Labour Unions in Public Corporations (TOKUSHUHOJIN–ROREN) submitted observations to the Government on the application of the Convention, forwarded in August 2012. The Committee intends to examine these observations and the comments that the Government may wish to make on the matters raised therein at its next session in 2013.

Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181) (ratification: 1999)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the tripartite committee (representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution). Protection ensured by the revision of the Worker Dispatch Law. The Committee notes that, at its 313th Session (March 2012), the Governing Body adopted on 26 March 2012 the recommendations of the tripartite committee established to examine the representation alleging non-observance by Japan of the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution by the Japan Community Union Federation (document GB.313/INS/12/3). These recommendations entrust the Committee with following up the matters raised in the representation with respect to the application of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's report received in October 2012, which includes comments formulated by the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC–RENGO). The report contains replies to the matters raised in the tripartite Committee report. In paragraph 43 of the tripartite Committee report, the Committee expressed its firm hope that the new bill to revise the Worker Dispatch Law would soon be enacted into law in order to ensure "adequate protection" for all workers employed by private employment agencies in accordance with Articles 1, 5 and 11 of the Convention. It also referred to the importance of consulting the social partners on the legislative provisions in question. The Committee notes that Act No. 27 of 2012 for Partial Revision of the Act for Securing the Proper Operation of Worker Dispatching Undertakings and Improved Working Conditions for Dispatched Workers (hereinafter referred to as the "2012 Revised Worker Dispatch Law") was enacted on 28 March 2012 after some amendments were made by the Diet. Those amendments included the removal of the prohibition of registration-type worker dispatching and dispatching to the manufacturing industry. The issue of "registration-type dispatch" was one of the main issues raised by the complainant in the representation.

Article 5(1). Equality of opportunity and treatment. In paragraph 38 of tripartite Committee's report, the Government was requested to clarify whether the provisions of Article 5(1) of the Convention apply to both the dispatch business operators and the dispatch receiving companies. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its 2012 report indicating that section 3 of the Labour Standards Law, which prohibits discriminatory treatment with respect to working conditions of workers, applies to both dispatch business operators and their clients in accordance with section 44 of the Worker Dispatch Law. In addition, dispatch business operators are prohibited from engaging in discriminatory treatment with respect to accepting applications and conducting interviews. The Government was invited to take the necessary action to remove any doubt as to the application to all workers of the provisions of Convention No. 181, including Article 5(1) (paragraph 39 of the report). The Government indicates that Japanese laws and regulations impose employment responsibilities on dispatching business operators that are employers in principle, and then identifies the responsible parties by specifying matters on which responsibilities should be imposed on clients by provisions of the Worker Dispatching Law. It adds that various rules are established to avoid lack of protection for dispatched workers which is caused by the unclear responsibilities of employers. The Committee invites the Government to provide further information on the application of Article 5(1) of the Convention in practice. For example, please state whether the authorities responsible for the application of the abovementioned legislation or tribunals have rendered decisions involving this matter which relates to the application of the Convention (Part IV of the report form).

Article 11. Measures to ensure adequate protection for workers employed by private employment agencies. The Japan Community Union Federation submitted in the representation that the decision rendered by the Supreme Court of Japan in the Iyo Bank case violated Article 11 of the Convention under which member States are required to ensure adequate protection for employees of temporary work agencies. In paragraph 40 of its report, the tripartite Committee noted the concern expressed by the Government with respect to new problematic forms of dispatch working, such as dispatching on a daily basis without proper management, workers continuously being engaged in dispatch work for a long time as a result of having no alternative options, and cases of dispatching to prohibited businesses. In paragraph 42, the tripartite Committee further noted that the proposed bill to revise the legislation would significantly increase the authorities' power to control illegal dispatches. The Committee notes with interest that the 2012 Revised Worker Dispatch Law prohibits day worker dispatching in principle for a term of 30 days or less, obliges dispatching business operators to make efforts in taking measures to promote transition of fixed-term employment of certain dispatched workers to indefinite-term employment, and creates a system in which clients are deemed to have offered employment contracts to the dispatched workers in cases where illegally dispatched workers are accepted by clients that are aware of such illegality. Following the adoption of the 2012 Revised Worker Dispatch Law, the Committee invites the Government to provide further information with respect to the impact of these new measures taken to ensure protection for workers in the areas described in Article 11.

Other issues following the representation. In paragraph 41 of the tripartite Committee's report, it was noted that – unlike the information earlier provided by the Government concerning the amendments to the Worker Dispatch Law that would strengthen the protection afforded to dispatch workers by prohibiting in principle the “registration-type dispatch” and worker dispatching to manufacturing business – the Diet did not retain the proposed amendments in the revised law enacted on 28 March 2012. The Government was invited to take all the necessary measures to bring the legislation and practice in line with Articles 1, 5 and 11 of the Convention. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that the 2012 Revised Worker Dispatch Law includes a provision to specify ways to deal with the registration-type worker dispatch and dispatching to the manufacturing industry as matters for study. The JTUC–RENGO indicates that the enactment of the 2012 Revised Worker Dispatch Law has reversed the current towards deregulation that has been the norm since the establishment of the Worker Dispatch Law. Nevertheless, the JTUC–RENGO finds it regrettable that the bill formulated on the basis of proposals put together through discussions in the Labour Policy Council was amended by the Diet. In particular, the deletion of the ban on “registration-type dispatch” and the call to reconsider the nature of this form of dispatch in the Labour Policy Council has resulted in the problem that the issue of registration-type workers, whose employment is precarious and for whom protection regarding the securing working conditions is in reality difficult to carry out, is left unresolved. In addition, issues such as the situation with manufacturing industry dispatching still remain. The JTUC–RENGO further indicates that the Revised Labour Contract Act, enacted on 3 August 2012, includes provisions that are applicable to registration-type dispatch workers and adds that worker protection can be carried out under the revised legislation. The Committee invites the Government to provide information with respect to the new legal framework in relation to “registration-type dispatch” and worker dispatching to manufacturing industry. It also invites the Government to provide information on the operation in practice of the 2012 Revised Worker Dispatch Law and the Revised Labour Contract Act with respect to registration-type dispatch workers and workers dispatched to the manufacturing industry.

Article 10. Machinery and procedures for the investigation of complaints. The Committee noted in its 2009 direct request that 11 complaints were filed with the Ministry for Health, Labour and Welfare in 2007 in respect of the services provided by private employment agencies. Among other things, such complaints pertained to the working conditions and fees. The Committee invites the Government to continue reporting on the number and nature of the complaints received in respect of the activities of private employment agencies.

Article 13. Cooperation between the public employment service and the private employment agencies. The Committee previously noted that provision is made, under the Basic Principles of Employment Policies, for public employment security offices and the private employment agencies to make efforts to improve their proper supply and demand adjustment functions through cooperation between the public and private sectors. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the effectiveness of the cooperation between the public employment service and private employment agencies to improve their supply and demand functions.

Article 14. Adequate remedies in case of violations of the Convention. The Government indicates that it generally provides correctional guidance in cases of violations of the Worker Dispatch Law, and provided 9,280 instances of written guidance in 2011. Following the adoption of the 2012 Revised Worker Dispatch Law, the Committee invites the Government to provide information on the operation in practice of the remedies available in the event of violations of provisions of the Convention, and an evaluation of the adequacy of such remedies together with statistics, disaggregated by gender and sector of the economy, with respect to the source of complaints.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2014.]

Jordan

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in August 2011 in reply to the 2010 observation. The National Agenda (2006-15) and the document “We are all Jordan” of 2007 were combined into a three-year Executive Development Programme (EDP) 2007-09, which was followed by the EDP 2009-12. Promoting employment and training is both a priority and a cross-sectoral issue of the National Agenda and the EDP, to the extent that trade and investment policies, support to new industries and SMEs, and the increase of the private sector competitiveness are expected to stimulate job creation. In November 2010, the Jordan Global Jobs Pact Country Scan Report was prepared in coordination with the ILO and included an overview of the policy responses to the economic and financial crisis, and recommendations on how national policies, including employment policies, can contribute to shaping a fair and sustainable globalization. The Government further reports on labour market developments in line with the National Agenda. The cumulative number of additional jobs created between 2006 and 2009 was faster than that required to achieve the target unemployment rate of 6.3 per cent by 2017. The unemployment rate was reduced from 14.8 per cent in 2005 to 12.9 per cent in 2009 and was expected to be below 10 per cent in 2012. Public sector hiring continued to play an important role in absorbing Jordanian jobseekers. The Government acknowledges that the distribution of development benefits can be improved and investment should be promoted in governorates affected by higher unemployment rates. It also indicates that migrant workers continued to increase in the labour market. The Committee notes the establishment of the National Centre for Employment providing labour market information and job-matching services, as well as active labour market measures to support employment in the private sector, such as through offering incentives to employers for job creation. The Committee further notes that the National Employment Strategy (NES) was endorsed in May 2011. It seeks to address structural employment, calling for policies and programmes to amplify job creation including in the rural areas and governorates, while expanding social protection to all. The Committee also notes that a new Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) 2012-15 has been launched which builds on the results of the Global Jobs Pact Country Scan and the goals outlined in the National Agenda, the EDP and the NES. Promoting decent work opportunities for all workers and strengthening employment policy coherence are among the DWCP priorities. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report detailed information on the impact of the National Employment Strategy, within the framework of the economic and social policy objectives of the National Agenda 2006-15 and the Executive Development Programme 2011-13, in terms of the promotion of full, productive and freely chosen employment. It also invites the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in relation to the employment priorities of the DWCP. The Government is also invited to include updated statistical data on the situation, level and trends of employment, unemployment and underemployment.

Coordination of education and training policy with employment policy. The Government indicates that the Employment, Education, Technical and Vocational Training Council has been established in line with the objectives of the National Agenda and is in charge, inter alia, of developing employment and training policies and programmes, and coordinating the relevant bodies. The Council is composed of a fund aimed at supporting employment and training and a Centre for Certification and Quality Control for education and training. The Government further indicates that it has formulated a set of comprehensive vocational programmes aimed at providing trainees with additional skills to increase their employability. The Committee notes that supporting training of Jordanians in the occupations needed by the labour market is one of the objectives of the NES. Moreover, the DWCP 2012-15 seeks to address the mismatch between education supply and labour market demand. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures adopted, including in the context of the DWCP, to enhance the education and training system, and increase the quality and labour market relevance of training courses.

Youth employment. The Committee notes the Government’s information on young graduates participating in diploma and university level courses organized by the Vocational Training Agency in 2009, as well as students enrolled in technical diploma-level courses offered by the Agency in collaboration with Belqaa Applied University/Korean Institute of Technology over a three-year period (2008-11). The Committee notes that unemployment is particularly high among young persons and graduates, being estimated at around 31 per cent at the end of 2011. The DWCP 2012-15 focuses on promoting youth employment through measures such as increasing access of youth to entrepreneurship training opportunities. The Committee invites the Government to supply disaggregated data on young persons obtaining lasting employment following their participation in vocational guidance and vocational training programmes. It also requests the Government to provide information on other initiatives taken in consultation with social partners to increase opportunities for young persons, especially young graduates, to find lasting employment.

Women’s employment. The Committee notes that 96 per cent of young graduates attending training programmes organized by the Vocational Training Agency in 2009 were women (317 persons). Training covered areas such as administrative tasks, information technology, hairdressing and traditional crafts. The Government also refers to training programmes for women implemented by the Vocational Training Agency through agreements for training and employment with the private sector, such as in the field of gold shaping, as well as to a new training project to be started in 2011. The Committee recalls that Jordan faces a very low female participation rate, with 14 per cent of women participating in the labour force. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that women may qualify for productive employment opportunities. It also requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures taken to facilitate the integration of women into productive employment.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Government indicates that programmes implementing the NES were formulated with the participation of all official partners. The Committee notes that reinforcing social dialogue mechanisms is among the NES priorities. It also notes that capacity development of the social partners and social dialogue platforms are an integral part of the DWCP 2012–15. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report examples of the manner in which the views of the social partners are taken into account in the development, implementation and review of employment policies and programmes. It also requests again the Government to indicate whether consultations have been held with representatives of workers in rural areas and the informal economy.

Madagascar

Implementation of an active employment policy. Involvement of the social partners. The Committee takes note of the observations of four Malagasy trade union federations belonging to the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) (FISEMA, FMM, SEKRIMA and USAM), submitted to the Government in September 2012. The four trade union federations refer to the lack of dialogue before decisions are taken; they cite the abandoning of the Action Plan for Madagascar (MAP), the repeal of the National Employment Policy, the National Employment Support Programme (PNSE) and the Employment Programme implemented with support from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP); and the adoption of Decree No. 2012-558 dated May 2012 concerning the reorganization of the Malagasy Observatory of Employment. In its 2011 observation, the Committee also noted that the closure of several enterprises had had adverse effects on employment. In this context, the Committee once again expresses its concern about the effective pursuit of “an active policy designed to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment”, “as a major goal” “within the framework of a co-ordinated economic and social policy” (Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention). It hopes that the Government will be in a position to send information in a report in 2013 that will allow an assessment of how the main axes of the economic policy, in areas such as monetary, budget, trade or regional development policies, contribute “within the framework of a co-ordinated economic and social policy” to the pursuit of the employment objectives laid down in the Convention. The Committee trusts that the Government will provide information on the measures taken to create lasting employment, reduce underemployment (reported to affect some 25 per cent of the active population) and combat poverty, specifying the measures taken to promote employment among the most vulnerable categories (women, young people and rural workers).

Coordinating education and training policy with employment policy. In its last report, the Government indicated that the Decree establishing the Malagasy Employment Promotion Office (OMPE) had been repealed in 2009 and that the employment programmes implemented with support from the UNDP had also been suspended since the onset of the crisis. Furthermore, the 2010 periodic household survey would seem to suggest that the level of education is a discriminating factor in job seeking, with unemployment tending to increase with the number of years of study. The Committee invites the Government once again to include information in its next report on the action taken to ensure the coordination of education and vocational training policies with employment policies. It also asks the Government to give an account of the results obtained in terms of access for young graduates to lasting employment.

Collection and use of employment data. The Committee understands that work was recently carried out by the Malagasy National Statistics Institute (INSTAT) on employment and the informal sector. The Committee invites the Government to send in its next report the results of the household surveys conducted by INSTAT. It accordingly invites the Government to give an account of the progress made in obtaining reliable data so as to formulate and implement an employment policy within the meaning of the Convention.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and implementation of policies. The Committee notes that the four trade union federations expressed their concern about the Government’s unilateral conduct. They state that dialogue between the Government and the social partners on employment has almost broken down, as the work of the National Monitoring Committee for the Promotion of Employment and Poverty Reduction has been put on hold. The Committee again draws attention to the importance of giving full effect to Article 3 of the Convention, particularly in a context of massive and persistent underemployment. It hopes that the next report will contain detailed information on the consultations held with representatives of the social partners on the subjects covered by the Convention. Furthermore, it asks the Government to provide information on the consultations held with the most vulnerable categories of the population, particularly with the representatives of workers in rural areas and the informal economy, in order to obtain their cooperation in the formulation and implementation of employment policy programmes and measures.

Mauritania

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1971)

Employment promotion. The Committee takes note of a new observation from the General Confederation of Workers of Mauritania (CGTM) forwarded to the Government in September 2012. The CGTM once again deplores the absence of a defined national employment policy. At the public service level, recruitment has become episodic and occurs to fill positions due to retirement. At the private sector level, employment and placement offices have ceased to exist. The CGTM again expressed concern with respect to the actions of multinational companies operating in the mining sector. These companies recruit employees without complying with the minimum standards required of professional qualifications. In its 2011 observation, the Committee had already noted the concern of the CGTM for the State to fulfil its obligation to define and promote employment policy in the country, which would be the best means of combating poverty in the current crisis and also of ensuring the best possible distribution of natural resources. In this regard, the CGTM had noted the systematic recourse to multinational companies, which exploit the principal mining, fishing and agricultural resources of the country without adopting genuine policies to promote employment. Furthermore, according to the CGTM, the multinational companies make use of expatriate staff to fill high-level positions. The CGTM considers that it is incorrect to say that there is a lack of skills among the national workforce. The CGTM also indicates that the major sectors which are the sources of employment, such as agriculture and stock breeding, are seriously dysfunctional. The Committee refers once again to its direct request of 2010 concerning the application of the Fee-Charging Employment Agencies Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 96), where it noted that, in response to a crucial problem of unemployment, the Government established the National Youth Employment Promotion Agency (ANAPEJ) and had once again authorized labour inspectorates to open employment offices. The Committee refers to its 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, in which it emphasized that one of the fundamental steps contributing towards the achievement of full employment is to build or strive to build institutions that ensure an efficient public employment service and to regulate the operation of private employment agencies (paragraph 786). The Committee invites the Government to provide, in its report due in 2013, information on the measures taken to reinforce the institutions necessary for the achievement of full employment. It hopes that the report will contain precise information on the contribution of existing employment offices in the country towards ensuring the adequate placement of available workers in the labour market. It recalls that assistance is available from the ILO to promote the Tripartite Declaration of Principles concerning Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. In its previous comments the Committee noted the “National Employment Strategy and Plan of Action 2008–12”. The Government indicated that the objectives pursued by the National Employment Strategy were geared to those laid down by the Strategic Framework for Poverty Reduction 2006–10 (CSLP 2), namely reducing the unemployment rate to less than 25 per cent and increasing the rate of persons completing technical or vocational training to 55 per cent in 2010. According to the latest estimates, even though the poverty index in 2008 was 42 per cent, compared to 46.7 per cent in 2004, this figure is still far removed from the 25 per cent target fixed for 2015. The National Employment Strategy had enabled the main gaps in employment policy to be identified, namely a very high unemployment rate, a national economy dominated by the informal sector and a mismatch between training and the needs of the national labour market. Issues and structures related to employment would now be grouped together within the Ministry of Employment, Integration and Vocational Training (MEIFP). The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on the results achieved under the National Employment Strategy in terms of the creation of lasting employment and the reduction of underemployment and poverty. In particular, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would supply information on the steps taken to improve the vocational and technical training available for young persons and women, to promote small and micro-enterprises, and to create productive and lasting employment in conditions which are socially satisfactory for workers in the informal economy.

Employment promotion and labour-intensive programmes. In its National Employment Strategy, the Government indicated that its economic choices had concerned industrial and commercial projects and labour-intensive programmes. The labour-intensive approach (HIMO) aimed at integrating persons with few or no skills in working life had been tried out in numerous programmes, such as the stone masonry programme, the urban development programme and the integrated national programme to support small and micro-enterprises. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the number of jobs created by the labour-intensive programmes and on their impact on the creation of productive employment.

Compilation and use of employment data. The Committee previously noted that the sixth component of the employment strategy underlined the need to establish a national information system on the employment market and a mechanism for technical and vocational training. This system would cover three main areas: (a) creation and operation of the network of producers and users of employment and training data, with the joint involvement of the Ministry of Employment, the National Office for Statistics, sectoral departments and the private sector; (b) monitoring of employment and the technical and vocational training mechanism; and (c) focusing on studies and analysis to improve the system and share information. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the progress made in the compilation of employment data, stating the employment policy measures further adopted thanks to the establishment of a new national employment information system.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in policy formulation and implementation. The Committee previously noted that, in the context of the National Employment Strategy, two institutional mechanisms would be established, namely an Inter-Ministerial Committee on Employment and a Higher Council for Employment, Training and Labour (CSEFT), chaired by the Ministry of Employment, and that within these two bodies the social partners would be represented. The Committee invites the Government to supply detailed information on the operation of these two bodies, and also on the participation of the social partners in the implementation of the National Employment Strategy. It also requests the Government to indicate the steps taken or contemplated to involve representatives of persons living in rural areas and those operating in the informal economy in the consultations provided for by the Convention.

Panama

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1970)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Reorganization of the employment office network. The Committee notes the detailed information on activities to modernize the employment service which were undertaken in 2006–09. In a report received in October 2010, the Government refers to the information and documentation sent with regard to the application of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122). In relation to the observation of 2004 concerning Convention No. 88, the Government indicates that the model put forward in August 2006 included the proposal to decentralize the employment offices. The Government reports that, in accordance with Article 3 of the Convention, in August 2008 an evaluation was made of the strengths, weaknesses and opportunities relating to the proposal of the public employment service. Difficulties were identified with regard to the area of employment in the regional offices, which should be given greater priority. Plans were also made to strengthen the Directorate-General of Employment in order to have an optimum public employment service that promotes, organizes and facilitates public access to a modern service. The Committee invites the Government to continue to supply information in its next report on Convention No. 88 on the progress made in ensuring that full effect is given to Article 3 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to include up-to-date statistical information on the number of public employment offices established, the number of applications for employment received, the number of vacancies notified and the number of persons placed in employment by such offices at national and local levels (Part IV of the report form).

Participation of the social partners. In its observation of 2004, the Committee noted the collaboration between the Ministry of Labour (MITRADEL) and the social partners in relation to certain matters covered by the Convention. The report received in October 2010 does not contain any information on the participation of the social partners to ensure the effective functioning of a free public employment service. The Committee refers to the 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, in which it highlighted the importance of the public services' direct and constant interaction with employers and jobseekers (General Survey, paragraph 208). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the social partners have been involved in the activities of the public employment service. The Committee recalls that, under the provisions of Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention, advisory committees must be set up to ensure the full cooperation of employers' and workers' representatives in the organization and operation of the employment service.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1970)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2011 observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the detailed information and full documentation provided by the Government in October 2010 in reply to the comments made in 2009.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy with social and economic policy objectives. The Committee notes the National Strategic Plan for the period 2010–14, approved in December 2009, which contains a programme for economic growth and social development, accompanied by a financial programming and public investment plan. The National Strategic Plan focuses on four high-priority sectors: high added-value logistical services, tourism, high-margin agriculture and non-traditional financial services. Significant investment is envisaged in public infrastructure projects, such as the construction of the Metro in the city of Panama and the launching of private electricity generation projects. Up to May 2010, the economy had grown by 5.5 per cent under the stimulus of an increase in investment in public infrastructure and the dynamism of sectors such as construction, trade and transport, storage and telecommunications. The Committee invites the Government to include detailed information in its next report on the impact that the National Strategic Plan 2010–14 is having on the achievement of the objectives of the Convention.

Labour market trends. According to the data published by the ILO in Panorama Laboral 2010, the participation rate as of October 2010 was 63.5 per cent, the occupation rate was 59.4 per cent and the unemployment rate was 6.5 per cent. The Committee observes that women's unemployment fell to 8.5 per cent, while men's unemployment rose slightly to 5.3 per cent. The sectors in which there was net job creation in 2009 include, in particular, construction under the effect of hotel and tourism projects, and various public infrastructure works. These projects helped to mitigate the effects of the financial crisis on employment. The Government envisaged the creation of 500,000 new jobs by 2010 and the creation of 500,000 additional jobs, with a view to achieving full employment by the end of 2020. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing statistical information in its next report on the situation, level and trends of employment, unemployment and underemployment.

Panama Canal extension and employment creation. The Government considers that the Canal Extension Project will generate as many technical and artisanal jobs as professional posts connected with the planning, coordination and implementation of the various phases of the work. It is envisaged that the extension work will lead to the indirect creation of jobs in areas such as logistics, messaging, purchasing and supplies, financial services, customs procedures, security, housing, transport and food. The National Vocational Training and Human Development Skills Institute (INADEH) has launched training programmes in such areas as information and communication technologies, enterprise management, English, gastronomy, hotels and tourism. The Committee notes that, as of March 2010, a total of 6,274 jobs had been created derived from the Canal Extension Project. The Government envisages a greater impact on employment generation in the medium and long term as a result of the economic growth induced by the additional income generated by the extended canal and the economic activities generated by the increase in cargo and vessels transiting the canal. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing information on the results that are being achieved in terms of direct and indirect employment creation through the Canal Extension Project and other infrastructure investments.

International trade and its labour market impact. With regard to the impact of the free trade treaties in terms of the improvement of the labour market, the Government indicates that the conclusion of free trade treaties has a positive impact on legal regulations and international cooperation in terms of the exchange of information and support for human resources development. The Committee invites the Government to provide more specific information in its next report on the impact of trade policy on the demand for employment.

Employment promotion and vulnerable categories of workers. The Government indicates that 14 per cent of the population is in a situation of extreme poverty and that the authorities have formulated a Strategic Social Plan with a view to reducing poverty and social exclusion and creating opportunities for everyone, with particular emphasis on training and social inclusion. The Plan is focused on the provision of high-quality education and vocational training to improve the skills of workers in priority development sectors. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to meet the needs of persons who are below the poverty line and to promote the development of income-generating opportunities.

Youth employment. The Government indicates in its report that youth unemployment is an alarming problem which has given rise to much attention in the public sector. The youth unemployment rate was 15.2 per cent in 2009. The Government adds that an analysis is being undertaken of the occupational situation and difficulties encountered by young persons in integrating the labour market. The programme “My First Job”, launched in July 2009, envisages the provision of training to over 20,000 young persons between the ages of 18 and 29 who lack the skills to compete on the labour market, including in the most vulnerable areas of the country. By the end of 2010, some 2,213 young persons who had been unemployed and were without work experience had entered into the labour market. The General Directorate of Employment is implementing the Labour Assistance and Integration Programme (PAIL), which offers grants for periods of up to three months of vocational adaptation in enterprises. As of July 2009, agreements had been concluded with 104 enterprises at the national level to hire 860 persons. The Committee requests the Government to provide data in its next report on the impact of the measures adopted in improving youth employability and in supporting and promoting the entrepreneurship initiatives of young persons.

Coordination of vocational training and employment policies. The Government indicates that 6 per cent of GDP is invested in education. It recognizes that educational results, over and above quantitative progress in access to education and average schooling (94 per cent of the population have completed primary education) are still not satisfactory, particularly with regard to quality and equality of opportunity. In this respect, the Committee notes a considerable increase in the number of students enrolled in the INADEH, which offered 991 courses during the period between January and May 2010. Total enrolment rose to 21,217 students, of whom 6,576 obtained certificates. Furthermore, collaboration with other institutions at the national level resulted in the creation of new careers and university programmes in critical areas for the implementation of the Canal Extension Project. The number of universities and training institutes increased. The Committee notes that the Strategic Social Plan proposes the establishment of coordination machinery between the INADEH and the Ministry of Labour (MITRADEL) and their institutional strengthening with a view to the development of a system for the identification of demand for vocational training and employment services. The Committee requests the Government to include information in its next report on the manner in which INADEH and MITRADEL coordinate so as to ensure that education and training policies are in coherence with employment policy.

Participation of the social partners. The Committee notes that the Government is continuing to examine the possibility of reactivating the Tripartite Decent Work Commission. The Committee recalls the essential role played by social dialogue in employment policy and in the promotion of decent work. The Committee requests the Government to include detailed information in its next report on the progress achieved in the reactivation of the Tripartite Decent Work Commission and reiterates its interest in examining concrete information on the manner in which the social partners participate in the process of designing, formulating, implementing and reviewing employment policies, as required by Article 3 of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Poland

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

Employment trends and implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the Government's report received in August 2012 containing detailed replies to the points raised in the 2011 observation. It also notes the observations submitted by the Independent Self-Governing Trade Union “Solidarność” which were forwarded to the Government in September 2012. The Government reports that Poland, once the country with the highest unemployment rate in the European Union (EU), has become a country where the unemployment rate in 2009 is about the average for the EU-27. The Government indicates that the National Action Plan for Employment (NAPE) for 2009–11 determined that the main objective is to increase professional activation of Poles during the economic slowdown. It adds that the implementation of the NAPE for 2009–11 has helped mitigate the effects of the economic crisis on the labour market. The unemployment rate for the working age population (15–64 years) increased from 8.3 per cent in 2009 to 9.7 per cent in 2010, 9.8 per cent in 2011, and 9.9 per cent in April 2012. In late May 2012, the number of unemployed persons registered in labour offices reached 2,013,936, an increase of 2.6 per cent over one year. Over several years, the long-term unemployment rate decreased by almost half. In the 2003–06 period, every second unemployed person remained in the records for more than 12 months after registration. At the end of 2009, every fourth registered person remained without work for over a year. In 2010 and 2011, the rate increased to respectively 29.1 per cent and 34.7 per cent. The rate showed a downward trend at 34.5 per cent at the end of the first quarter of 2012. The Committee also notes that the NAPE for 2012–14 provides for the simplification of the procedures for running employment agencies while increasing the protection of their customers; the development of the cooperation system between local authorities and employment agencies in order to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of actions for the disadvantaged groups in the labour market. The Government further indicates that it aims to improve the quality of labour market services through mass training of staff of labour offices. As part of a training project, more than 2,300 employees of labour offices were trained and a second training programme will address the training needs of 940 counsellors of public employment services. The Committee notes the comments provided by Solidarność indicating that supervision over temporary agencies was limited and steps have been taken in order to lower professional qualifications of public employment services officers. Solidarność also suggests that the Government should take steps in order to cover the undeclared economy with the employment policy, as well as increase the amount of allocations for professional training. It adds that increased allocations should be directed towards the employment of vulnerable groups, such as unemployed women, young people, persons with disabilities, older workers, informal economy workers, migrants and farmers. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the results achieved in implementing active employment measures to promote full employment and how these measures will translate into productive and lasting employment opportunities for the unemployed and other categories of vulnerable workers, such as older workers, persons with disabilities and workers in the undeclared economy.

Youth unemployment. The Government states that high unemployment among young people remains one of the most important problems in the Polish labour market. The following factors have a significant impact on the situation of young people: little work experience and professional qualifications in conjunction with high expectations often result in unemployment. As a consequence, young people are particularly vulnerable to the adverse effects of the economic crisis. The Committee notes that the unemployment rate of young people aged 15–24 increased significantly, from 20.7 per cent in 2009 to 25.8 per cent in 2011. In order to allow this group to supplement deficits in work experience and education, and to enable taking up first employment, the Government initiated activation programmes for people under 30 years of age. In total, activation measures under the professional activation programmes covered 50,616 people in programmes such as internships, general training and vocational training, entrepreneurship programmes and subsidized employment. The Government further reports that a pilot project called “Your Career – Your Choice”, initiated in 2012, forms an integral part of the programme “Youth in the labour market”. This project involves the development of a new path to deal with customers of labour offices who are under 30 years of age, so that immediately after registration in the labour office they are offered individual support and a package of training and employment vouchers. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the measures to tackle youth unemployment and the effectiveness of the various measures implemented to promote the long-term integration of young persons in the labour market. The Government might also wish to hold appropriate consultations with the social partners and representatives of the stakeholders concerned in overcoming the difficulties encountered to obtain lasting employment for young people.

Women’s employment. The Government reported in 2010 that, in recent years, the employment situation of women in the workforce improved, and that the disparity between the unemployment rate of men and women decreased. The Government indicates that the NAPE for 2009–11 identified the importance of the issue of ensuring equal access to the labour market for women and men. During this period, a number of initiatives co-financed by the European Social Fund were implemented, which were aimed at strengthening the position of women in the labour market by overthrowing the existing stereotypes, raising the level of awareness among workers and labour market institutions, as well as providing access to institutionalized forms of childcare. The Government reports on the introduction of mechanisms to counter discrimination, with particular emphasis on discrimination against women, in employment promotion and access to the labour market. The Government reports that the unemployment rate for women was 10.9 per cent in 2011, compared with 8.8 per cent for men. More than 64 per cent of unemployed women in the fourth quarter of 2011 had a secondary, post-secondary or higher education, while among men the rate was 43.4 per cent. Furthermore, women accounted for 54.7 per cent of all unemployed persons who participated in activation programmes in 2011. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to combat the stereotypes regarding the roles of women and men in society and at work, and it invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the impact of the measures adopted to ensure that women have the fullest possible opportunity to qualify for and use their skills, in accordance with Article 1(2)(c) of the Convention.

Consultation with the social partners. The Committee notes the observations submitted by Solidarność indicating that trade unions are deprived from their role in participating in the administration of the labour market as the General Employment Council, where trade unions have their representatives, does not perform either an administrative or supervisory role. It further indicates that proposals of legislative changes are often presented in a manner which prevents social partners from expressing their opinion and being duly consulted. In the 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, the Committee underlines the importance of ongoing genuine tripartite consultations for tackling and alleviating the consequences of the global economic crisis (General Survey, 2010, paragraph 788). The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report detailed information on the involvement of the social partners in the formulation and implementation of employment policies and programmes.

Romania

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends and active labour market policies. The Committee takes note of the detailed statistics supplied in the Government's report received in August 2012 in reply to points raised in the 2011 observation. The Government indicates that in 2011, Romania's active population stood at an estimated 9,868,000 persons, of whom 9,138,000 were employed and 730,000 unemployed; the recorded average employment rate dropped from 7.6 per cent in 2010 to 5.38 per cent in 2011, falling to 5.05 per cent in March 2012. The Government is of the view that unemployment among persons over 45 years of age and among single persons with dependent children remains one of the most acute labour market problems. Through the employment programme implemented by the National Employment Agency (ANE), 377,772 persons found employment in 2011. Furthermore, most of the objectives set by the National Employment Programme for 2011 appear to have been met. The Government indicates that the ANE has implemented projects financed by the sectoral operations programme for the development of human resources (POSDRH 2007–13) in order to anticipate changes in the labour market and consolidate the capacity of the public employment services at national and local level. The National Reform Programme 2011–13 (PNA 2011–13) includes among the key priorities for attaining national employment objectives, the improvement of the operation of the labour market by facilitating the transition from unemployment or inactivity to employment, the enhancement of workers' skills, the improvement of the quality of employment of persons in rural areas, young people and women. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the attainment of the objectives of the 2011–13 employment programme. It hopes that the next report will also contain an evaluation of the measures taken under the economic and financial policy in terms of sustainable growth and productive employment.

Categories of vulnerable workers. The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government on the results obtained in 2011 following the implementation of specific employment subsidization measures. Of the 324,000 persons employed under such measures, 13,420 were unemployed persons over 45 years of age, 1,230 were sole breadwinners of single-parent families, 315 were three years away from retirement and 250 were persons with disabilities. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report up-to-date information on the measures designed to improve the employability of vulnerable workers and on the results obtained in terms of sustainable integration in the labour market.

Youth employment. The Government indicates that in 2011, the unemployment rate among young people (15-24 years) was 23.8 per cent and that the incidence of long-term unemployment among young people was some 63.4 per cent. The Committee notes the amendments introduced to Act No. 279/2005 by Act No. 06/2011, such as the abolition of the obligation on employers to obtain authorization and the master craftsman's certificate, the determination of the minimum and maximum length of apprenticeship contracts in workplaces, the obligation on the employer to organize an evaluation of the apprentice's theoretical and practical training, and the linkage between the length of the apprenticeship contract and the level of skill acquired. The purpose of these amendments is to remove obstacles to access to employment, for unskilled young people among others. Furthermore, according to the information supplied by the Government on the results of the ANE's employment programme as they pertain to young people: in 2011, 73,113 of them were engaged in employment; this was also the case for 3,813 long-term unemployed and 94 graduates aged 18 or more from social establishments. The Committee invites the Government in its next report to provide up-to-date information allowing it to assess the impact of the measures taken to facilitate lasting employment opportunities for young people.

The Roma minority. In its previous comments the Committee pointed out that social exclusion is harmful to those directly affected and breeds negative social consequences across generations (General Survey concerning employment instruments, 2010, paragraphs 554 and 566). In its report, the Government states that actions to secure the social and economic integration of persons belonging to the Roma community are ongoing, provided for in the 2001–10 National Strategy to improve the status of the Roma. The implementation of the aforementioned programme resulted in the hiring of 2,250 persons in 2011. Furthermore, 64 persons found jobs in the course of 2011 thanks to the employment exchange organized for persons belonging to the Roma community. The Committee notes that the results of the ANE's National Employment Programme for the Roma appear to be lower in 2011 than in 2010. The Government's report states that 6,696 Roma found employment in 2010 as compared to 5,760 in 2011. In view of the progress still to be made in promoting the inclusion of the Roma minority into the labour market, the Committee invites the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on measures designed to enhance the social cohesion of the Roma minority.

Education and training policies. The Government's report refers to continuous training programmes financed out of the unemployment insurance budget, thanks to which, in the period from 1 January 2011 to 31 January 2012, 50,155 persons received vocational training with a view to employment, of whom 17,850 were hired. The report also refers to the priorities set in the POSDRH 2007–13, which include improving the adaptability of the workforce and enterprises and the promotion of active employment measures. In its observation of 2010, the Committee observed that very few newly employed young workers and long-term unemployed persons (young persons as well as adults) had obtained employment as a result of their participation in vocational training programmes. The Committee invites the Government to provide detailed information of the measures taken under the POSDRH 2007–13, particularly measures to enhance the quality and relevance of the education and training provided. It again invites the Government to provide information on the impact of the training programmes in terms of job opportunities created for the unemployed, young persons, the Roma minority and other categories of vulnerable workers.

Promotion of small and medium-sized enterprises. In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government states that in 2011, 50 persons found employment due to loans granted to small and medium-sized enterprises for the purpose of creating jobs, and a further 710 persons started businesses thanks to the guidance and assistance services provided to engage in self-employed activities or to start a new business. The Committee invites the Government to include information on the continuation of the measures undertaken to support the creation of small and medium-sized enterprises and on their impact in terms of stimulating employment.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and implementation of policies. The Government states that Act No. 62 of 10 May 2011 on social dialogue provides that the social partners are to be consulted on draft legislation and on other economic and social activities. The Committee invites the Government in its next report to provide specific examples of how the Act on social dialogue has allowed the social partners to be effectively consulted and to participate in decision-making on the matters covered by the Convention. Please also include information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that these consultations include representatives of other sectors of the active population, particularly representatives of the Roma minority and of persons working in the rural sector and the informal economy.

Sao Tome and Principe

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Contribution of the employment service to employment promotion. The Committee notes the Government's report received in April 2007 in reply to its 2006 observation, which includes a brief statement that there is no formal cooperation between the public employment services and representatives of employers' and workers' organizations and that the public employment services have not yet been properly organized to act in accordance with the Convention. The Committee understands that human resources development and access to basic social services are one of the five principles set out in the National Strategy for Poverty Reduction (NSPR – Estratégia Nacional de Redução de Pobreza), which was validated in December 2002 and approved in January 2003. From the information contained in the update of the NSPR published in January 2005, urban and rural unemployment in the country is still a matter of serious concern. In this context, the Committee emphasizes the need to ensure the essential function of employment services, which is to achieve the best possible organization of the labour market, including its adaptation to meet the new needs of the economy and the active population (Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention). It requests the Government to provide the statistical information available in published annual or periodical reports concerning the number of public employment offices established in the district of Agua Grande and in rural areas, the number of applications for employment received, the number of vacancies notified and the number of persons placed in employment, disaggregated by gender and the location of the offices concerned (Part IV of the report form).

Cooperation of the social partners. The Committee refers once again to the provisions of Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention and asks the Government to report on the manner in which the representatives of the social partners have been associated with the operation of the public employment service. The Committee recalls that for many years, it has been pointing out that the above provisions of the Convention require the establishment of advisory committees to secure the full cooperation of representatives of employers and workers in the organization and operation of the employment service.

The Committee recalls again that the Office is available to provide the Government with technical advice and assistance for the implementation of a public employment service within the meaning of the Convention.

Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received since 2007. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its previous comments, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the brief reply provided by the Government in March 2007 indicating that owing to a lack of human, material and financial resources, the Ministry of Labour still does not have a centre to deal with persons with disabilities. Therefore, there are currently no policies of any kind relating to the matters covered by the Convention. The Committee also notes that there is a single NGO which deals with issues relating to persons with disabilities. Owing to the lack of material and financial resources, this NGO has been able to do very little for persons with disabilities. The Committee hopes that the Government will demonstrate its commitment to the Convention and will be able to provide in its next report detailed information on the measures adopted or envisaged to promote employment opportunities in the open labour market for persons with disabilities within the meaning of the Convention. The Committee recalls that the Government may request technical advice and assistance from the Office for the implementation of a national policy to provide vocational rehabilitation and to promote employment opportunities for persons with disabilities as required by the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Senegal

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. The Committee takes note of the Government's reply received in August 2012. The Government recalls that it has been involved in reformulating its new national employment policy (NPNE) since 2006, which covers the period 2010–15, and aims to place employment issues at the heart of the economic and social development strategy. Elaborated on a tripartite basis, the NPNE has three specific objectives: to alleviate the pressure of unemployment in urban areas; to develop rural employment and slow down the rural exodus; and to improve the employability of a constantly growing labour force and the quality of employment. The Government points out that although work on reformulating the NPNE has ended, it has not yet entered into effect on account of the changes that have occurred since the elections. The Government also indicates that in order to correct the labour market imbalances that have widened despite its efforts, the Senegalese State has embarked upon two major programmes in the context of the implementation of the NPNE: the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP), which constitutes the ILO's contribution to the economic and social policy document (DPES); and the programme "Young employment promotion taking into account migration issues", which is the outcome of a joint initiative of the United Nations system. As the NPNE has not yet entered into effect, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the progress made in the adoption and implementation of a national employment policy. The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to indicate in its next report the results achieved by the measures implemented in the context of the poverty reduction strategy to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment.

Article 2. Collection and use of employment data. The Government states that the employment market information system is slow to get under way due to its limited human and material resources. It reports nonetheless on a certain number of activities that have been carried out since 2008. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on any progress made in the context of these activities. In particular, the Government refers to the monitoring of employment that has featured in the DPES since 2008, the work on implementing a national employment and vocational qualifications observatory, and the coordination in drafting the African Operational Directory of Occupations and Jobs (ROAME). The Government also states that the National Agency for Statistics and Demography (ANSD) is planning, with the members of the National Statistics System, to introduce an annual national inquiry on employment and occupational qualifications from 2013 onwards. Furthermore, the Committee notes that the ANSD has decided to devote the 2010 issue of "The country's economic and social situation" to an analysis of the lack of data on employment issues. According to this same publication, the potentially active population of young persons aged 15 years and over increased from 5,678,497 in 2002 to 7,299,215 in 2010, accounting for 202,000 new jobseekers on average each year. The unemployment rate varies between 10 and 14 per cent according to the sources and remains very high among young persons aged 15 to 34 years. However, the visible underemployment rate, which was 22 per cent in 2006, was allegedly 15.2 per cent in 2010, whereas the overall activity rate is estimated to be 50 per cent. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on employment trends, in particular on developments in unemployment and underemployment.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the design and formulation of policies. In reply to its previous comments, the Government states that the Higher Employment Council, in accordance with Decree No. 1406 of December 2009, was officially inaugurated by the Prime Minister on 15 September 2011. According to the Government, the social partners are involved in the elaboration and implementation of the national employment policy (PNE). They are members of the Higher Employment Council and took an active part in the adoption of the PNE, as well as in all stages of its implementation. The Committee hopes that the Higher Employment Council will soon resume its activities and that the Government will be able to provide information on these. The Committee also asks the Government to indicate the way in which the experience and opinion of the social partners were taken into account in the implementation of the NPNE.

Part V of the report form. ILO technical assistance. The Government indicates that the cooperation with the ILO, when it was examining ways to devise a strategy to formalize the informal economy and update the draft NPNE, resulted in the holding of a forum on the strategy of formalization and funding for the elaboration of the NPNE, as well as support for its implementation. Furthermore, the Government states that the PNE, the programme "Youth employment promotion taking into account migration issues" and the DCWP were elaborated on a tripartite basis with the involvement of all the social partners and actors concerned. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing detailed information on initiatives that have benefited from cooperation with the ILO, in particular on the impact these might have on employment.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its previous comments.

Contribution of the employment service to employment promotion. ILO technical assistance. The Committee previously noted the Government's statement, contained in a report received in June 2004, indicating that the legislation on employment services has been included on the agenda of the Joint Advisory Commission for discussion. It was the Government's intention to provide a new mandate to employment services so that they are transformed into dynamic labour market information centres. The new employment services will have to cover not only urban centres but also rural areas and ensure the provision of information, planning and the application of employment policies throughout the country. The Government also stated that ILO technical assistance is required to achieve its objectives. The Committee welcomed the fact that the Government was proposing to strengthen employment services. It also recalled that the Office provided support for programmes for the generation of employment opportunities by strengthening employment services for young persons. The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to describe in its next report the manner in which the employment service reforms have contributed to securing their essential duty, which is to ensure "the best possible organization of the employment market as an integral part of the national programme for the achievement and maintenance of full employment and the development and use of productive resources" (Article 1 of the Convention), in cooperation with the social partners (Articles 4 and 5). In this respect, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide the statistical information that has been compiled concerning the number of public employment offices established, the number of applications for employment received, the number of vacancies notified and the number of persons placed in employment by such offices (Part IV of the report form).

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its 2009 observation.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Active labour market measures. Youth unemployment. The Committee noted in its 2009 observation the Government's report received in November 2008. It noted that youth unemployment had decreased (from 26.6 per cent in 2006 to 20.3 per cent in 2007) due to more targeted active labour market policy measures and increased participation in education and training. The Government referred to the school leavers' work experience programme as an efficient active labour market tool designed to prevent long-term unemployment of young persons under 25 years of age. This programme allows school leavers to acquire vocational skills and practical experience through work experience in a job which corresponds to the educational level they have achieved. The Committee further noted that under the National Reform Programme for 2008–10, a set of new active labour market policy measures were adopted in 2008 with the objective of decreasing regional differences in employment rates, especially in underdeveloped regions with high unemployment rates. It noted that long-term unemployment was the highest in the European Union (EU) area (8.3 per cent in 2007 with the overall unemployment rate standing at 11 per cent) and the share of older workers in the labour force was far below the EU average. As regards other measures taken to ensure coordination between lifelong learning policies and prospective employment opportunities, the Committee noted that, by Resolution No. 382 of 25 April 2007, a Strategy of Lifelong Learning and Lifelong Counselling was established. The Committee once again asks the Government to include information in its next report on the impact of the measures taken in tackling regional disparities and long-term unemployment with specific reference to the measures implemented under the Strategy of Lifelong Learning and Lifelong Counselling in favour of young unemployed persons.

Roma minority. The Government indicated in its November 2008 report that a number of pilot projects were being carried out to create employment opportunities for members of the Roma community through partnerships with regional governments, employers, Roma organizations, NGOs and public employment services. These measures included educational activities, financial support for the establishment of municipal social enterprises, and the provision of financial subsidies for job creation under the state budget. In this connection, the Government stated that the objective to create job opportunities for the Roma minority and to offer education and training in line with the needs of the local labour market has been achieved to a modest extent. The Committee noted that a special focus was placed on improving the level of educational attainment of the Roma minority with the adoption in 2008 of a new programme for upbringing and education of the Roma children and pupils, including promotion of their secondary and tertiary education. The Committee once again requests the Government to report on the activities undertaken with a view to promoting productive employment of the Roma population, in particular with regard to the measures implemented to increase their success in achieving appropriate levels of qualifications and skills.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and implementation of policies. In its November 2008 report, the Government reiterated that the comments of the social partners are duly taken into account in the elaboration of legislative and other measures to be taken in relation to employment policy, notably through consultations carried out at the national level within the tripartite Economic and Social Council. It stated that representatives of disadvantaged groups, including the Roma minority, have been consulted on the implementation of employment-related measures designed for disadvantaged jobseekers. The Committee once again asks the Government to provide indications in its next report on the progress made in involving the social partners in the design and implementation of employment policies.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Spain

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1960)

Contribution of the employment service to employment promotion. Skills and training of employment service staff.

In the observation made in 2010, the Committee requested the Government to provide more precise information on the manner in which it is ensured that the staff of the employment service in the Autonomous Communities of Andalucía and Galicia have the requisite skills and have received adequate training to perform the duties envisaged by the Convention. In the detailed report received in October 2012, the Government describes the legislative measures adopted to reform the labour market and promote new forms of employment intermediation. The Government indicates that to strengthen the services provided for persons seeking employment and enterprises offering employment, as a result of the measures adopted in April 2008, 1,500 employment promoters were taken on up to December 2012. The Committee notes the information provided in the report on the recruitment of new staff by the Public Employment Service of Galicia (SPEG) for employment offices. Detailed information was included in the report on the methodology adopted to develop training for the new staff. The SPEG undertook and is continuing to carry out a series of measures for the technical improvement of its services and to raise the awareness of its staff in dealing with jobseekers. The Andalusian Employment Service also provided information on the conclusion of 413 temporary employment contracts for the recruitment of staff to reinforce the network of offices in the Autonomous Community of Andalucía. The Committee notes the information provided on the total staff of the Employment Service of Andalucía and changes in that respect between 2007 and 2011. The Government emphasizes that the number of staff was increased in the provinces in which the rise in unemployment was proportionally greater. In the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Workers' Commissions (CC.OO.), transmitted to the Government in September 2012, the view was expressed that the human resources allocated to public employment services are clearly inadequate. The budgetary cuts for public employment services were equivalent to a reduction of €3,200 million in 2012. The ratio of the unemployed to the staff of public employment services in Spain is very high. The CC.OO. indicates that the programmes of the public employment services are measured more by the number of users than their results and effectiveness in placing jobseekers. In its comments, the General Union of Workers (UGT) expresses identical concerns at the budget cuts for public employment services and the lack of human resources. The Committee recalls that Article 6 of the Convention provides that the employment service shall be so organized as to ensure effective recruitment and placement of workers. In its 2010 General Survey on employment instruments, the Committee indicated that consultation with the social partners is to be prioritized in the formulation and implementation of labour market policies. The essential duty of public employment services is to take action to achieve and maintain full employment. Considering the observations made by the CC.OO. and the UGT, the Committee invites the Government to ensure that the cooperation of the social partners is secured in the organization and operation of the employment service (Articles 4 and 5). The Committee refers to the comments made on the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), and once again requests the Government, in view of the current circumstances of the employment market in Spain, to provide updated information in the report due in 2014 on the measures adopted to ensure the functioning of employment offices sufficient in number to meet the needs of employers and workers throughout the country (Article 3). Please also provide the available published statistical information on the number of public employment offices established, the number of applications for employment received, the number of vacancies notified and the number of persons placed in employment by such offices. The Committee hopes that this information will allow for the assessment of public employment offices' effectiveness (Part IV of the report form).

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1970)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Measures to alleviate the impact of the crisis. The Committee notes the information sent by the Government in the report for the period ending in June 2012. The Committee also notes the observations sent by the Trade Union Confederation of Workers' Commissions (CC.OO.) and the General Union of Workers (UGT) and the Government's reply received in November 2012. The Government indicates that 2011 began with a slight recovery of the economy reflected in somewhat more positive trends in the labour market. From the third quarter of 2011 the process came to a halt: employment fell by 2 per cent in 2011. In the first quarter of 2012 the activity rate stood at 74.9 per cent, the occupation rate was 59.6 per cent and the unemployment rate was 24.4 per cent of the active population (unemployment rose by 4 percentage points by comparison with the same period in 2011). A total of 351,900 jobs were lost in 2011. At the end of that year, the number of unemployed persons stood at almost 5 million (with slightly more than 18 million occupied persons out of an active population of 23 million). The Government asserts that the labour reform approved by Royal Legislative Decree No. 2/2012 of 10 February 2012 issuing urgent measures for the reform of the labour market (adopted as Act No. 3/2012 of 6 July 2012) has created a regulatory framework for labour relations which are more favourable to job creation and maintenance. The Government states that it is being made easier for enterprises to adopt flexible measures in preference to the option of dismissal and it is promoting employability and stable recruitment, especially for young people. As regards the impact of Act No. 35/2010 of 17 September 2010, the Government indicates that the proportion of temporary workers decreased by nine percentage points between 2006 and 2010. However, the rate of temporary employment went back up to 25.3 per cent in 2011. The UGT considers that reducing the fiscal deficit has become the main objective of economic policy for Europe and emphasizes that this objective has hampered the recovery of both the economy and employment. The greatest impact of the adjustment measures has been on workers and their families. The current economic recession highlights the weaknesses in the productive market in Spain. The UGT claims that the solution is not to change the structure of the labour market but to establish a different balance among the various economic sectors, foster the recovery of national demand and boost the level of public sector employment and investment. The CC.OO. also highlights in its communication that 80 per cent of jobs lost between the first quarter of 2008 and the first quarter of 2012 have been jobs held by men, especially young men under 25 years of age. The most affected sector is construction. The Committee notes that in order to know the effects of the labour market reform undertaken since February 2012 and to quantify its macro-economic impact, the Government relies on a simulation which has foreseen an adjustment in wages and hours of work instead of a loss of jobs. The positive impact hoped for from the 2012 labour reform is an increase of 4.5 percentage points in the level of potential GDP. The corresponding rise in employment will result in a permanent reduction of 3.2 percentage points in the structural component of the unemployment rate. The Government admits that if the current credit terms and the debt levels of enterprises persist, it is only from 2014 that the impact of the labour reform on the number of persons in employment will be seen. In view of the precedence given to economic policy objectives indicated by the trade union organizations and the deterioration that has occurred in the employment situation since the observation made in 2010, the Committee invites the Government to indicate in its next report the manner in which Article 2 of the Convention is applied, namely whether a regular review is undertaken of the measures and policies adopted for attaining the objectives specified in Article 1. The Committee recalls that, under the provisions of Article 1 of the Convention, an active policy designed to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment must be declared and pursued as a major goal.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Government refers in its report to the various tripartite agreements concluded in 2011 and January 2012. The trade union organizations denounce the lack of social dialogue and the failure to comply with the agreements reached in the context of the 2nd Agreement on Employment and Collective Bargaining for 2012, 2013 and 2014, signed on 25 January 2012. The Committee points out once again that social dialogue is essential in normal times and becomes even more so in times of crisis. The Committee invites the Government to indicate in its next report the manner in which the experience and views of the social partners have been taken into account in the formulation and implementation of employment policy measures. The Government is also requested to state to what extent consultations have been held with representatives of the persons affected by the measures taken, particularly young persons, to enable an evaluation of the effective application of Article 3 of the Convention.

Long-term unemployment. Youth employment. The Government indicates that the balance of the results concerning the long-term unemployed in 2011, matching the deterioration in the employment situation, was negative. In the first quarter of 2012, a total of 2,822,500 persons were affected by long-term unemployment, 200,000 more than in the previous quarter. The incidence of long-term unemployment is slightly higher among adults than young people. The situation of young people followed the general trend, with a rise in the rate of youth unemployment. The Government lists the actions taken to improve the employability of young persons and the various job contracts available for young people. The UGT states that the numbers of long-term unemployed exceed those who have been unemployed for one or two years. The labour reform of 2012 will worsen the situation for young people by increasing precarity and reducing protection. The CC.OO. also states that university graduates are competing with those with vocational diplomas in the labour market, thereby leading to a perceived loss in value for vocational training. Many young persons have spent a greater amount of time studying without being able to find a job subsequently. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report up-to-date information on the impact of the measures taken to facilitate the return to the labour market of long-term unemployed persons. The Committee hopes that the information sent by the Government will enable it to examine the quality of employment provided for young people who have been the recipients of special contracts and measures taken to promote youth employment, particularly for young persons with few qualifications.

Integrated labour market policies. The Government states that labour legislation is of general application and hence there are no distinctions of a geographical nature except for specific mechanisms that only apply to certain autonomous communities such as Andalucía and Extremadura, which have higher unemployment rates and to which specific measures relating to agriculture are applied. The CC.OO. states that the crisis has worsened labour-related differences between regions. The unemployment rate has reached alarming levels, exceeding 30 per cent in the first quarter of 2012 in Andalucía, the Canary Islands and Extremadura; at the same time, the unemployment rate has ranged from 13 to 17 per cent in the Basque Country and Navarra owing to the presence of more industry, the lesser impact of the real estate bubble and their fiscal status. The UGT adds that the autonomous communities with less income and high unemployment rates display higher rates of temporary employment (Andalucía, Extremadura and Murcia). The Committee again requests the Government to include up-to-date information in its next report on the measures taken to reduce regional disparities so as to attain a better balance in the labour market.

Education and vocational training policies. The Government indicates that the Sustainable Economy Act, which was referred to in the observation of 2010, has been supplemented by Organic Act No. 4/2011 of 11 March 2011. The Committee notes the other information sent by the Government on the impact of the measures adopted under the 2011 National Reform Plan and the new measures introduced in 2012. The CC.OO. suggests that an evaluation should be undertaken of the positive impact of the programmes for cooperation with the autonomous communities, whose purpose is to reduce school drop-out rates and increase the provision of vocational training. The CC.OO. recalls that the renewal of the tripartite agreement on vocational training is pending and regrets that changes have been made unilaterally to the training model through the labour reform of February 2012. The Committee recalls the close link established in the 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments between achieving full employment and decent work and the adoption of innovative education and training policies for jobseekers. The Committee asks the Government to include in its next report up-to-date information on the measures taken to improve qualification standards and coordinate education and training policies with potential employment opportunities. The Committee invites the Government to include information, in the report due in 2013 on the application of the Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142), to enable it to evaluate the manner in which efforts have been intensified, with the cooperation of the social partners, to ensure that vocational guidance and training systems meet the learning and vocational training needs of the most vulnerable groups in the regions worst affected by the crisis.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2014.]

Sudan

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1970)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its 2011 observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Policies to promote employment and coordination with poverty reduction. In reply to its 2009 observation, the Government provided in September 2010 a brief report in which it recalled that, in the context of the five-year plan for the period 2007–11, a comprehensive strategy was adopted under which small employment projects aimed at poverty reduction were funded by the Government in collaboration with the Federation of Employers. Job opportunities were also created through funding and training activities for graduates and persons with disabilities. The Government also paid special attention to projects aimed at combating desertification and providing income-generating activities in regions suffering most from poverty. In its 2009 observation, the Committee noted that about 60–70 per cent of the population in the north and 90 per cent in the south of the country are estimated to be living below the poverty line, with incomes of less than US$1 per day. Persons living in rural areas, in particular women and internally displaced populations, are the hardest hit by poverty. Beyond the state of Khartoum, the infrastructure is either non-existent or underdeveloped. The Committee once again recalls that the UN adopted a policy for post-conflict employment creation, income generation and reintegration which stresses that, in post-conflict situations, employment is vital to short-term stability, reintegration, economic growth and sustainable peace. The Committee asks the Government to report in detail on the measures taken to develop and implement an active employment policy within the meaning of the Convention, with the assistance of the ILO and other international agencies. The Government is also asked to provide detailed information on the results obtained, in the context of the five-year plan for 2007–11, in meeting the employment needs of vulnerable categories of workers, such as women, young persons, older workers and persons with disabilities.

Collection and use of labour market data. In its 2009 observation, the Committee noted that the Government carried out a population census in 2008 in order to compile information needed by planners and policy-makers. The Government expressed its intention to release the results of the census in 2009 and to prepare a survey for the collection of data and information on the labour market. In this respect, the Committee notes that the ILO provided training to concerned staff to carry out a labour market survey. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report an account of the progress made to improve the labour market information system and to include detailed statistics on the situation and trends in employment, specifying the manner in which the collected data has been used to determine and review employment policy measures.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in policy preparation and implementation. The Government refers in its report to the formulation and implementation of an employment policy in line with the Global Jobs Pact. It also indicates that a national charter was formulated with the full participation of the social partners. The Government intends to provide the Committee with information on the development of the national charter in a subsequent report. In the 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, the Committee underlines the importance of ongoing genuine tripartite consultations for tackling and alleviating the consequences of the global economic crisis (2010 General Survey, paragraph 788). The Committee expresses its firm hope that the Government will supply detailed information in its next report on the consultations held with the social partners on the formulation and implementation of an active employment policy. It also requests the Government to supply information on the consultations held with the representatives of the persons affected by the employment measures to be taken, such as those working in the rural sector and the informal economy.

Technical assistance to fulfil reporting obligations and the requirements of the Convention. In view of the difficulties to comply with the reporting obligations under the Convention during these past few years and the lack of information in the last report received, the Committee notes that the preparation of a detailed report, including the information requested in this observation, will certainly provide the Government and the social partners with an opportunity to evaluate the effectiveness of the employment policy in meeting the objectives of full and productive employment set out in the Convention. In this regard, the Government might wish to request technical assistance from the relevant units of the ILO to address gaps in the implementation of an active employment policy within the meaning of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Sweden

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1965)

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Active labour market policies. Consultation with the social partners. The Committee notes the Government's report for the period ending in June 2012, including replies provided to previous comments formulated in 2011. The Government states that since its last report the labour market has gradually improved in Sweden. It reports that the positive development seen in the labour market over the past two years can be attributed to both the recovery and Government reforms. It indicates that the focus of Government reforms is on strengthening the conditions for groups with a weak foothold in the labour market, such as young people, people with a foreign background and other groups with high long-term unemployment, to obtain work. Signs that the reforms have improved the labour market's functioning include labour force participation and employment levels, which have increased among young, middle-aged and older people. The Committee notes that the labour force participation rate was 71 per cent in 2011. Compared to 2010, the rate increased among women by 0.6 percentage points to 68 per cent, while the corresponding rate for men was 73.9 per cent. Despite these positive developments, the Government indicates that resource utilization in the labour market is low and traces of the financial crisis are still evident. On average, the number of unemployed persons was 378,000 in 2011, a decrease of 38,000 compared to 2010. The unemployment rate was 7.5 per cent in 2011, a decrease of 0.9 percentage points compared to the previous year. To address the weak developments in the labour market, the Government proposed a labour market package in the Budget Bill for 2012. This package includes measures to improve the Public Employment Service in the form of stronger support and mediation for those at risk of long-term unemployment and better monitoring of jobseeking activities. It also includes a higher quality and more activities in the special employment support mechanism and the job guarantee for young people. The Public Employment Service and the Swedish Social Insurance Administration were assigned in 2012 to expand their cooperation with the aim of reaching more people on long-term sick leave to help them return to the labour market. The Government states that its primary goal is to lead Sweden towards full employment through less exclusion. The value of work, which provides freedom, community, security, and opportunities, cannot be emphasized enough. It adds that changes have not only been carried out in labour market policy but also in other policy areas, including tax and education policies and social insurance. The Committee notes that in the long run, the Government is set on matching the Swedish education system both to new challenges in a globalized world and to the needs of the labour market. The Government indicates that more vocational training and a closer cooperation between schools and universities and the business community have been identified as measures to accommodate those needs. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the effects of its labour market policies on sustainable and productive employment generation. It also invites the Government to include further information on the measures taken in the area of education and training policies and on their relation to prospective employment opportunities. Please also provide updated information on the consultations held with the social partners on the matters covered by the Convention, and the effects of the sickness insurance reform on employment.

Women, youth, long-term unemployed, immigrants and persons with disabilities. The Government indicates that unemployment spells are generally short in Sweden, but long-term unemployment is still high and the number of people who are long-term unemployed is likely to increase in the coming years. An important challenge will be to ensure that people facing long-term unemployment receive the support they need to find work, and at the same time prevent the number of long-term unemployed people from growing. The Committee notes that the number of long-term unemployed (defined as over 27 weeks) decreased from 132,000 in 2010 to 113,000 in 2011, corresponding to 33 per cent of the unemployed. With respect to young persons (age 15–24), the employment rate was 40.4 per cent in 2011, an increase of 1.9 percentage points compared to 2010. Among the foreign born (age 15–74), the employment rate was 56.2 per cent in 2011, an increase of one percentage point compared to the previous year. The unemployment rate was 22.9 per cent among youth and 15.8 per cent among the foreign born. The Government indicates that the Introduction Act has been in place for over a year and is geared towards helping newly arrived refugees and their families become established more quickly in the labour market. The Government has also appointed a commission to propose initiatives that will increase the labour market participation and speed up the establishment of newly arrived foreign-born women and immigrants joining their families in Sweden. With respect to persons with disabilities, the Government reports on its strategy for disability policy during 2011–16 and measures taken to help people with disabilities find employment. It further reports that in December 2011, the Public Employment Service together with the Swedish Agency for Government Employers, the Swedish Agency for Disability Policy Coordination (Handisam), the Swedish Work Environment Authority, and the central state employee organizations were assigned to develop a proposal for an internship programme at state authorities for persons with disabilities, including how it should be formed and implemented. The Committee would welcome continuing to receive detailed information on the efforts made to improve the employment situation of women, youth, long-term unemployed, immigrants and persons with disabilities.

Thailand

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes that the Government's report due in 2012 has not been received. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session in 2013 and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its 2011 observation.

Follow-up of the discussion at the 99th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2010). In its 2011 observation, the Committee noted the replies provided by the Government containing information on the measures taken to promote employment for persons with disabilities, women in remote areas and workers in the informal economy. According to the data from the National Statistical Office, 24,300,000 workers, representing nearly half of the entire active labour force, were in the informal economy. The Committee also noted that studies performed by two academic institutions concluded that Thai workers in the informal economy definitively need benefits from the Social Security Fund. The Government referred to the second Small and Medium Enterprises Promotion Plan for 2007–11 among other measures to enhance the capacity of business and enterprises to tackle the global economic crisis. The Committee asks the Government to provide in its next report updated information on the impact of the measures taken to promote full, productive, freely chosen and decent employment for vulnerable categories of workers, in particular for workers in the informal economy. Please also include information on the extent, trends and coverage of social security benefits for workers in the informal economy, as well as on the steps taken to coordinate active labour market measures with social security benefits.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. Involvement of the social partners. The Government recalled the three strategic objectives of the Tenth National Economic and Social Development Plan for 2007–11: development of human potential and social protection, sustainable restructuring of rural and urban development, and upgrading national competitiveness. Between October 2009 and September 2010, the Government provided some assistance to workers that were unemployed as a consequence of the global economic crisis. The Committee noted that a Code of Practice to Promote the Labour Relations in the Economic Crisis was adopted by the social partners in 2008. In its contribution received in February 2011, the National Congress of Thai Labour (NCTL) recalled that most Thai people have lived in poverty, and indicated that the disparity of income generation was rather high. The NCTL asked the Government to formulate concrete policies and measures to alleviate income disparities. The Committee asks the Government to include in its next report information on the results obtained in terms of employment generation concerning the Tenth National Economic and Social Development Plan and to provide details on the employment objectives formulated following the 2007–11 Plan, in addition to directions of the next national plan. In this regard, the Committee stresses the importance of promoting and engaging in genuine tripartite consultations on the matters covered by the Convention. The Committee therefore asks the Government to include in its next report detailed information on the consultations held with the social partners to formulate and implement an active employment policy as required by Article 3 of the Convention.

Labour market and training policies. The Government indicated that the National Committee on Skills Development Coordination and Labour Development was set up under the authority of the Prime Minister. In 2010, the Department of Skills Development formulated a new strategy to take into account the impact of the global economic crisis. Furthermore, the Committee noted that the Government provides online labour market information. The NCTL expressed the view that the skills development scheme does not respond to the needs of the labour market. The cooperation between skills development institutes and enterprises in implementing the measures should be taken into account. In its 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, the Committee emphasized the increasingly important role of the social partners and training institutions in defining human resources development strategies. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the manner in which the representatives of workers and employers have contributed to developing vocational training mechanisms, as well as how the coordination between training institutions has been strengthened. Please also indicate how skills development measures are coordinated with active labour market measures.

Women. Prevention of discrimination. The Government indicated that there is no discrimination towards women and that women have equal opportunities and market access. The Committee noted the statistical data disaggregated by gender provided by the Government in its report on the number of jobseekers registered with the Department of Employment who obtained jobs, as well as on the training courses provided. Referring to its comments on the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), the Committee requests the Government to clarify to what extent the data provided in its report on Convention No. 122 shows that the principle of non-discrimination is being implemented effectively in practice. It also invites the Government to continue to provide information on initiatives taken to promote increased participation of women in the labour market. Please provide further information, including statistics, on the effects of such initiatives in ensuring that there is freedom of choice of employment, and that each worker shall have the fullest possible opportunity to qualify for, and to use his or her skills in a job for which he or she is well suited in the conditions set out in Article 1(2)(c) of the Convention.

Migrant workers. The Government previously recognized that it faces a challenge concerning migrant workers related to political, social, economic, health care and national security issues. Having realized the difficulties that migrant workers face in terms of harassment from employers and employment agencies, including the threat of human trafficking, the Ministry of Labour carried out various measures to register migrant workers, especially illegal migrant workers, and to enhance the labour inspectorate for these workers. The Government mentioned the Declaration of 3 August 2010 for dignity and work aimed to protect Thai workers working overseas and migrant workers working in Thailand and to prevent human trafficking, to reduce service fees and expenses on employment services and to take care of the families of the workers concerned. The Committee noted that the NCTL expressed concerns about the practices and measures taken by the Government to tackle the difficulties concerning migrant workers. The NCTL further indicated that an extensive number of unregistered alien workers, who do not possess any national identity certificates, are still remaining. Unregistered alien workers are unable to enjoy their rights with regard to access to labour protection and social security coverage, as required by Thai law and regulations. The Committee requests the Government to act expeditiously and to report in detail on the effective measures taken to address and resolve issues relating to migrant workers, with due regard to gender sensitivity. It also requests the Government to provide information on the results obtained in the framework of an active employment policy to prevent abuse in the recruitment of foreign workers and the exploitation of migrant workers in Thailand, with due regard to their fundamental rights.

Older workers. The NCTL indicated that priority should be given to extend medical coverage, retirement savings and employment opportunities for older workers. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report information concerning the measures taken or envisaged in order to better integrate older workers into the labour market.

Workers in the rural sector and the informal economy. The Government reported on the project for emergency employment and skills development to mitigate the suffering of people from economic crisis and natural disasters. Emergency employment includes hiring workers for public interest work like dredging canals and ditches and building dams. The Committee invites the Government to indicate how the emergency schemes implemented gave the opportunity for its beneficiaries to qualify for and use their skills in decent jobs for which they are well suited, as required by Article 1(2) of the Convention. In this respect, the Committee invites the Government to report on the quantity and quality of job opportunities for homeworkers, with special attention to the situation of women, and on the impact of the measures taken to reduce the decent work deficit for male and female workers in the informal economy and to facilitate their transition into the labour market, and to accord them adequate protection.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tunisia

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

Implementation of an active employment policy. In reply to the 2011 observation, the Committee notes the statement forwarded by the Government in June 2012. The Government indicates that the problem of unemployment is one of the principal causes of the Revolution of 14 January 2011. It adds that unemployment is a major challenge for the country: unemployment was in excess of 18 per cent of the population at the end of 2011 (13 per cent in 2010) and represents the essential cause of poverty. Youth employment is one of the major challenges for the Government, particularly in relation to the employment of those completing higher education, who number 80,000 a year. The unemployment rate among those completing higher education is 30 per cent. In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized the importance of being able to examine information on the manner in which the main elements of economic policy contribute, “within the framework of a coordinated economic and social policy” (Article 2 of the Convention), to achieving the objectives of full, productive and freely chosen employment. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the results achieved and the difficulties encountered in the achievement of the employment policy objectives set out in the Government’s new programmes, including updated quantitative information on the trends and results of the measures established to stimulate growth and economic development, raise living standards, meet labour force needs and resolve the problem of unemployment and underemployment (Article 1(1)).

Compilation and use of employment data. The Committee notes the indications made by the National Institute of Statistics: the number of unemployed aged 15 and over reached 738,400 in December 2011 (or an increase of over 50 per cent in relation to the number for 2010). The Government explains this increase by the substantial decrease in investment and the loss of jobs in agriculture, tourism, industry and services. In 2011, the unemployment rate was much higher for women, reaching 28.2 per cent, compared with 15.4 per cent for men. The Committee invites the Government to indicate the manner in which the data compiled have been used to promote long-term employment among the most vulnerable categories of workers, such as women, youth, older workers, rural workers and workers in the informal economy.

Labour market policies to promote balanced and integrated regional development. The Government indicates that the problem of unemployment worsened in the west (26.9 per cent) and the south-west (29.5 per cent). In the north, the rate varies between 14.5 and 22.3 per cent. In governorates without economic fabric, unemployment reaches 40 per cent. The Committee once again invites the Government to provide information on the results achieved, in collaboration with the social partners at the regional and local levels in terms of job creation with a view to overcoming the backlog in employment between regions.

Promotion of small and micro-enterprises. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed the desire to examine the measures adopted “in order to create an environment conducive to the growth and development of small and medium-sized enterprises” (see Paragraph 5 of the Job Creation in Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises Recommendation, 1998 (No. 189)). The Committee understands that one of the principal objectives of the employment programme of the Provisional Government is the development of entrepreneurship and the creation of micro-enterprises, as well as support and follow-up at all the stages of enterprise development. The Committee invites the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the results achieved through these initiatives.

Article 3 of the Convention. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and application of policies. With reference to its concluding remarks in the 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, the Committee once again emphasizes that social dialogue, which is already essential in periods of economic stability, becomes even more important in times of crisis (paragraph 794 of the 2010 General Survey). The Committee emphasizes the importance of giving full effect to Article 3 of the Convention, particularly in the new constitutional context and against the background of persistent unemployment. The Committee hopes that the next report will contain precise information on the consultations held with the representatives of the social partners on the subjects covered by the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide information on the consultations held with the most vulnerable categories of the population, and particularly with representatives of workers in rural areas and in the informal economy, with a view to securing their collaboration in the formulation and implementation of employment policy programmes and measures.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2014.]

Uganda

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1967)

Article 2 of the Convention. Labour market information system. In its report received in June 2012, the Government indicates that the Labour Market Information Unit (LMI) is a small structure in the Directorate of Labour where capacity building is needed in order to enable the LMI to carry out regular studies on different aspects of employment and labour. The Committee notes with interest the detailed statistical information contained in the second issue of the Labour Market Information Bulletin was published in 2010. It further notes that Uganda is among the countries participating in the Project on the Improvement of Labour Market Information in Africa (2010–12) funded by the African Capacity Building Foundation. The overall objective of the project is to develop the capacity to collect, analyse and disseminate labour market information in a continuous and timely manner. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report up-to-date information on the current situation and trends regarding the active population, employment, unemployment and underemployment throughout the country and in the different regions, by sector of activity, sex, age and level of qualifications.

Articles 1 and 2. Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. Following its previous observations, the Committee recalls that the National Employment Policy (NEP) for Uganda was completed, adopted by Cabinet and launched by the President in May 2011. The NEP addressed the problems of unemployment, underemployment, labour productivity and poverty in the country. Furthermore, the NEP stressed that despite Government poverty reduction efforts, the number of Ugandans living under poverty (7.5 million according to the data provided by the Uganda Bureau of Statistics (UBOS) in 2009) is still high and that addressing unemployment and underemployment is one of the ways to further reduce poverty levels. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the results achieved and the difficulties encountered in attaining the employment policy objectives set out in the National Employment Policy, including results of the programmes established to stimulate growth and economic development, raise living standards, respond to labour force needs and resolve the problems of unemployment and underemployment.

Promotion of youth employment. The Committee recalls that the NEP indicated that the population was predominantly young with children and youth constituting 75 per cent of the total population. According to the UBOS, the youth population was estimated to increase from 5.4 million in 2002 to 8.5 million in 2015. Despite the introduction of universal primary education, the majority of new entrants to the labour force over the period 2002–03 to 2009–10 had not completed primary education. Poor training, low productivity jobs and low wages trap the working poor and exclude young persons from participating in economic growth. The Committee notes that the NEP also emphasized that the youth requires to be instilled with, among others, a positive work culture, commitment and dedication to work, including discipline, career guidance and counselling and provision of skills to enable them to meet the current needs of the labour market. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the results of programmes concerning education and vocational training for young persons. Please also provide information on the efforts made to improve the employment situation for young persons and the results achieved in terms of designing targeted programmes and incentives for promotion of sustainable job creation for the youth.

Promotion of women's employment. The Committee recalls that women represent over 50 per cent of the labour force. A larger percentage of the female rather than the male labour force is illiterate. Unequal access to education restricts women to sectors with low productivity and low wages, and most of the young unemployed persons are women. The Government indicates that women in Uganda constitute the majority of farmers and unpaid workers as they are responsible for most of the care economy. Only 12 per cent of women are in wage employment compared to the 25 per cent of economically active men (the male participation rate in wage sectors is more than three times that of women). The Committee notes that there is a sharp segregation of women into low-paying sectors such as agriculture; women in low-paying sectors receive at most half the average male wage. Recalling the Committee's comments under the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), as to the occupation segregation of women and its contribution to the gender pay gap, the Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on Convention No. 122 on the efforts to improve job creation and increase labour market participation for women as a result of the measures adopted.

Informal economy. The Committee notes that, according to the Labour Market Information Bulletin, 63.7 per cent of those who worked outside agriculture were working in the informal sector; in the case of the female workforce such ratio was equivalent to 67.2 per cent, while in the case of the male workforce it was equivalent to 61.1 per cent. Approximately 60 per cent of the urban workforce and 67 per cent of the rural workforce were working in the informal sector. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the efforts made to extend access to justice, property rights, labour rights and business rights to the informal economy workers and business (see 2010 General Survey concerning employment instruments, paragraph 697). It also invites the Government to indicate how the initiatives relating to micro-enterprises have contributed to improving the working conditions in the informal economy.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Committee recalls that the NEP was developed by a National Taskforce comprising ministry officials, representatives of the Federation of Uganda Employers, of the unions and of the Uganda Bureau of Statistics. Furthermore, the NEP stressed that the Government should take overall responsibility for its implementation with the participation of other actors, including the private sector, employers' and workers' organizations, development partners, as well as other stakeholders. The Ministry responsible for Labour was responsible for spearheading the implementation of the policy in collaboration with other ministries, social partners and agencies that play a key role in employment creation. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report examples of the questions addressed or the decisions reached on employment policy through tripartite bodies. It would also appreciate to receive information on the involvement of the social partners in the implementation of the National Employment Policy.

Ukraine

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1968)

Implementation of an active employment policy. Measures taken in response to the crisis in collaboration with the social partners. The Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2012 and the observations submitted by the Confederation of Free Trade Unions of Ukraine (KVPU). The Government indicates that during the implementation period of the Basic Lines of the State Employment Policy 2010–11, positive changes have been observed in the labour market in terms of employment and increased economic activity. It reports that the fall in unemployment has been facilitated by the implementation of active employment assistance programmes by the State Employment Service. At the beginning of 2009, there were almost 880,000 unemployed citizens registered with the State Employment Service and this number fell to 500,000 at the beginning of 2012; 763,000 unemployed persons were placed in jobs by the State Employment Service in 2011. The Committee understands that Ukraine had a strong economic recovery following the deep recession resulting from the 2008–09 global crisis. However, economic recovery appears to be slow in 2012. Measures have been taken to create a conducive business environment by simplifying the tax and customs codes. The Government also reports that the Act on the Employment of the Population, adopted in July 2012, includes mechanisms providing for the reduction of social contributions paid by employers when creating new jobs for older workers and other vulnerable categories of workers; free consultations on setting up and running a business; internship programmes offered to students and recent graduates; and education and training programmes. The Committee notes that the Act regulates the operations of commercial entities providing intermediary job placement services in Ukraine and abroad in line with the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181). The Ministry of Social Policy, in conjunction with the relevant central executive authorities and the social partners, has prepared draft Guidelines for the Implementation of the State Employment Policy up to 2014. The primary objectives are to create new highly paid jobs to increase the employment rate and to make it simpler for young specialists to enter the labour market. The Committee notes with interest the National Tripartite Accord on Employment and Jobs, based on the ILO Global Jobs Pact, concluded in June 2012 between representatives of the Government, and employers' and workers' representatives. It also notes with interest the third Decent Work Country Programme of Ukraine for the 2012–15 period which continues the cooperation between the ILO and Ukraine to promote decent work as a key to national development. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the effectiveness and sustainability of the measures implemented in the framework of the State Employment Policy up to 2014 and the National Tripartite Accord on Employment and Jobs, in collaboration with the social partners. It also invites the Government to provide information in its next report on how the measures adopted have translated into the generation of productive and lasting employment opportunities for the unemployed and other categories of vulnerable workers.

Coordination of education and training policies with employment policy. The Government reports that it has identified that one of the most important factors in ensuring the provision of productive work and employment is targeted training, retraining and enhancing the qualifications of the workforce. In order to improve and further develop the system of workers' vocational development, the Act on the vocational development of workers was adopted in January 2012. The Government indicates that there is an observable trend in Ukraine for more vocational training of workers to be carried out as part of an in-house training system. In 2011, the number of workers who enhanced their qualifications at work rose by 3.6 per cent when compared to the previous year. The Committee invites the Government to include an assessment in its next report on the efficiency and relevance of training programmes and other initiatives undertaken in collaboration with the social partners, in promoting the return of unemployed persons to productive employment. In this context, the Committee would appreciate information on the impact of specific mechanisms and measures for improving the quality and labour market relevance of training in lifelong learning perspective, as well as tools for skills analysis and forecasting, especially at the sector level. It further invites the Government to include information on the measures taken to improve coordination of employment and education and training policies with a view to enhancing the employability and competitiveness of the labour force.

Youth employment. The Government indicates that half of all unemployed people who made use of employment services in 2011 were young people under the age of 35. In the first half of 2012, 527,000 people under the age of 35 made use of employment services and, of these, 36 per cent were placed in jobs with assistance from the State Employment Service. The Government reports that the Act on the Employment of the Population provides guarantees of placement in positions specially earmarked for young people looking for their first job. Up to 5 per cent of all positions at enterprises, institutions and organizations are established in this manner. In 2011, 8,000 positions were set aside for young people, and nearly 5,000 young people were placed; 7,700 positions have been designated for young people in 2012. The Committee notes other measures reported by the Government targeting the employment of young people, such as a programme where 3,000 young people were offered unemployment assistance to set up their own businesses in the first half of 2012, and a public works programme which employed 66,700 young people in the first half of 2012. The Committee notes the observations submitted by the KVPU indicating that young and older jobseekers have practically no chance to obtain employment as some job advertisements include an age requirement. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the impact and sustainability of the measures taken to tackle youth unemployment and the other measures implemented to promote the long-term integration of young persons in the labour market.

United Kingdom

Active employment policy. Consultation with the social partners. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government in August 2012 in response to the request made by the Conference Committee in June 2012. It also notes the observations provided by the Trade Union Congress (TUC), and the Government's response to these observations in October 2012. In reply to the 2011 observation, the Government reports that the number of people employed in the public sector was 5.9 million in March 2012, down 39,000 from December 2011, and the number of people employed in the private sector in March 2012 was 23.38 million, up 205,000 from December 2011. Since the Government announced its intention to reduce the deficit as a means to securing stronger growth, the amount of people in employment (aged 16–64) has risen from 28,862,000 in May 2010 to 29,354,000 in July 2012, which represent an increase in employment from 70.3 per cent to 70.7 per cent. Over the same period, unemployment has risen slightly from 7.9 per cent to 8.1 per cent. There were 9.29 million persons economically inactive and 1.6 million people were on Jobseeker's Allowance as at March 2012. The Government indicates that, as part of an active labour market policy, full use must be made of support offered by the State. Individuals claiming state benefits can expect increased help in overcoming barriers to work, finding and retaining a job. However, benefit payments will become increasingly conditional on the requirement to use this improved support and to look for employment. In this regard, the Committee notes that several regulations came into effect in April 2011 which created the legislative framework for the Mandatory Work Activity programme for Jobseeker's Allowance recipients. The Government indicates that Mandatory Work Activity gives extra support to a small number of Jobseeker's Allowance claimants who would benefit from a short period of activity. There are around 19,000 Mandatory Work Activity placements available per year, and Jobcentre Plus advisers have the flexibility to use the programme, where they feel it is appropriate, as part of a wider range of support options. Mandatory Work Activity placements last for four weeks and deliver a contribution to the local community. The TUC believes it is impossible to describe the Mandatory Work Activity programme as "freely chosen" as it is a compulsory work programme of 30 hours per week for four weeks for all benefit claimants of working age. It adds that the Government's equality impact assessment showed that Mandatory Work Activity is disproportionately likely to be applied to older, disabled and minority ethnic claimants. The TUC further indicates that Mandatory Work Activity is not supportive and there are more and more reports of abuse of the programme. The Government responded by indicating that the programme is only available to those claiming Jobseeker's Allowance, and not for all benefit claimants of working age. Mandatory Work Activity is a "work-related activity" that is designed to move participants closer to the labour market, not directly into employment. Official statistics from the early stages of the programme show that 29 per cent of claimants referred to Mandatory Work Activity between May 2011 and February 2012 were non-white and 21 per cent were claimants with disabilities. The Government indicates that claimants are referred to the programme on the basis of suitability for the scheme, regardless of ethnicity. It also adds that the figure with respect to persons with disabilities is not disproportionate compared to the Jobseeker's Allowance caseload. Furthermore, early findings from a survey of participants have found a positive impact on work attitudes, motivation to find work, and the majority of participants reported a good experience in the programme. The Committee notes that full findings will be published in December 2012. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation of the Mandatory Work Activity programme and how this programme will translate into productive and lasting employment opportunities for its beneficiaries. It also invites the Government to specify in its next report how, pursuant to Article 2 of the Convention, it keeps under review the measures and policies adopted according to the results achieved in pursuit of the objectives of full, productive and freely chosen employment, specified in Article 1. It recalls that, in the terms of that Article, an active employment policy should be pursued "as a major goal". The Committee trusts that the Government will be able to report on further developments on how the social partners have been involved in the consultation procedures required by Article 3 of the Convention.

Role of employment services in employment promotion. The Government indicates that staff in Jobcentre Plus, service providers, local authorities, further education colleges, training providers and employers are coming together in their communities to find new and innovative ways to support people back to work. It reports that it is modernizing the way Jobcentre Plus delivers its services and handing responsibility back to jobcentre plus advisers who work with claimants on a daily basis. Advisers are now able to offer claimants a comprehensive menu of help, including skills provision and job search support. They have the flexibility to decide which interventions will help claimants at the most appropriate point in their jobseeking journey, tailoring this to individual need. To support this new regime, the Government indicates that a single flexible support fund has been created worth approximately £118 million, which allows local resources to be aligned to the needs of the locality, to tackle local unemployment and multiple barriers to employment in a holistic and joined up way. The flexible support that Jobcentre Plus district managers are putting in place is bolstered by a number of Get Britain Working measures whose success depends on strong local partnerships and the active support of employers. The Committee also notes that the Government reported that it met with the TUC to discuss the design of the Get Britain Working programme. In particular, they discussed the potential impacts on employees, where employers are involved in hosting work experience placements for unemployed young people. The Government indicates that discussions have been constructive and are ongoing. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on the contribution of the employment services in the implementation of active labour market measures.

Education and training policies. The Government reports that National Skills Academies (NSAs), which are employer led, innovative, sector based education and training organizations, are designed to enable high levels of employer involvement and attract significant employer sponsorship and investment. The NSAs have a clear and distinct place in the skills system as delivery agents. Their role is to transform the supply of skills to meet employers' needs in defined sectors or areas of the economy by delivering specialist, high quality skills provision. The Government indicates that there are currently eighteen NSAs in operation and one NSA in development. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the results achieved by NSAs in matching skills and labour market needs.

Youth employment. The Government reports that youth unemployment dropped in July 2012, when compared to April 2012, to 22.2 per cent. It indicates that the Youth Contract was introduced in April 2012 to provide additional support, worth almost £1 billion, to young unemployed people over the next three years. The Youth Contract builds on existing support to provide young people with more intensive adviser support and work experience, as well as providing employers with wage incentives and apprenticeship incentives to encourage them to recruit young people. Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Scottish Government introduced in December 2011 the role of Minister for Youth Employment. The ministerial portfolio focuses on drawing together all the activities across Government to support youth employment. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures taken to address youth unemployment and the results achieved in Scotland following the appointment of the Minister for Youth Employment.

Persons with disabilities. The Government indicates that the Green Paper "Support and aspiration: A new approach to special educational needs and disability", published in March 2011, sets out proposals for a different system to support better life outcomes for young people with disabilities and those with special educational needs. These proposals include a single assessment process and education, health care plan focusing on outcomes that will follow the young person from birth to age 25, improvements to vocational and work-related learning, and improved opportunities to get and keep a job, including the introduction of supported internships for young people with disabilities. In addition, the Government's scheme for workers with disabilities, Access to Work, supported 35,840 people with disabilities to keep or get employment during 2010–11. Between April and December 2011, 27,420 people with disabilities were supported by the scheme. Access to Work provides additional support for individuals whose health or disability affects the way they do their job. It provides individuals and their employers with advice and support with extra costs which may arise because of an individual's needs. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on the results of the implementation of the measures designed to address the needs of persons with disabilities in the open labour market.

Older workers. The Committee notes that the Default Retirement Age (DRA) was removed from legislation. Employers can no longer force employees to retire when they reach the age of 65. Employers can only set retirement ages where it can be objectively justified in their particular circumstances – but this is open to challenge at Tribunal. The Government also indicates that Jobcentre Plus managers and advisers now have more flexibility to help older benefit claimants to find employment, and – apart from some specific options for jobseekers aged under 25 – older people have the same access to a comprehensive menu of individually tailored help. Furthermore, the Department for Work and Pensions is working in partnership with key business leaders in nine key occupational sectors to drive forward sustained improvements in the employment, training and retention of older workers. The Government indicates that it is still gathering information on the impact of these measures on older people's employment. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the impact of these measures in terms of promoting the participation of older workers in the labour market.

Long-term unemployed. The Committee notes that the Work Programme was launched on 10 June 2011 which has replaced much of the employment support previously offered. The Government indicates that providers will be paid primarily for supporting claimants into employment and helping them stay there for longer than ever before, with higher payments for supporting the hardest to help. Jobcentre Plus will continue to support benefit claimants during the first months of their claim. The Work Programme is for those people who are at risk of long-term unemployment. Any claimants who complete two years on the Work Programme without finding employment will return to Jobcentre Plus for further support. The Government indicates that the Department for Work and Pensions is currently running a small scale trial which will be evaluated to understand how best to support very long-term Jobseeker's Allowance claimants who may reach the end of the Work Programme from 2013. The trial was launched in November 2011 and will run for approximately nine months across Jobcentre Plus districts to test two new elements of support: Community Action Programme, a 26-week contracted employment programme; and Ongoing Case Management, a more intensive offer of Jobcentre Plus support and access to further resources. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report information on the implementation of the Work Programme and the achievements in promoting the return of long-term unemployed persons to the labour market.

Uruguay

Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181) (ratification: 2004)

Protection of workers covered by the Convention. With reference to its observation of 2010, the Committee notes the replies communicated in August 2012. The Government indicates that private employment agencies placed

3,442 persons in jobs in 2010 from a total of 41,643 jobseekers. The Committee again invites the Government to send in its next report the text of any court decisions interpreting the national legislation concerning the rights of workers in relation to company decentralization (Act No. 18099 of 2007, as amended by Act No. 18251 of 2008) so as to be able to examine the manner in which protection is secured to workers covered by the Convention (Part IV of the report form). It also invites the Government to provide up-to-date information on the number of workers protected by the Convention, the number and nature of reported infringements, and any other relevant information concerning the application of the Convention in practice (Part V of the report form).

Regulation of private employment agencies. Controls and penalties. The Government reiterates that the National Employment Directorate (DINAE) continues to administer the register of private employment agencies. DINAE coordinates with the general labour inspectorate in applying appropriate mechanisms and procedures in the event of any irregularities. The Committee notes that the draft decree implementing the Act which ratified Convention No. 181 is still being examined by the tripartite group on the application of international standards and has not yet been approved. The Committee refers to its observation of 2010 and hopes that the Government will be in a position to announce, in its next report, that the implementing decree has been approved so as to ensure that DINAE can effectively supervise the operation of companies that supply labour and also regulate services that are still provided by “former employment agencies” (Article 3). The Committee hopes that the Government will be able to describe in its next report the operation of adequate machinery and procedures for the investigation of complaints, alleged abuses and fraudulent practices relating to the activities of private employment agencies (Article 10). The Committee reiterates that DINAE and other competent public authorities (such as the labour inspectorate) should have sufficient resources to take remedial action to ensure the application of the relevant national legislation (Article 14).

Exceptions. The Government reiterates that the categories of workers and types of services in respect of which exceptions are authorized have not yet been determined since the implementing decree has not yet been approved. Should the exceptions provided for in Article 7(2) of the Convention be authorized, the Committee invites the Government to provide the relevant information and give the reasons for such authorization (Article 7(3)).

Migrant workers. In reply to previous comments, the Government refers to Act No. 18250 of January 2008 concerning migration. The Committee invites the Government to provide further information in its next report on the manner in which penalties are imposed on agencies covered by the Convention which engage in fraudulent practices or abuses (Article 8(1)). It also requests the Government to include information on labour agreements outside the MERCOSUR area in relation to the matters covered by the Convention (Article 8(2)).

Cooperation between public services and private agencies. Compilation and dissemination of information. The Government indicates that through the network of public employment centres (CePE) the profiles of applicants are sent to private employment agencies, the consent of the worker concerned being required in such cases. Agencies must send information on a quarterly basis. The Committee invites the Government to send further information in its next report on the implementation in practice of cooperation between the public employment service and private employment agencies.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1982)

Implementation of the employment policy in the framework of a coordinated economic and social policy. Participation of the social partners. With reference to the observation made in 2011, the Committee notes the indications provided in the Government's report. The Committee also notes the observations of the Independent Trade Union Alliance (ASI) on the application of the Convention and the Government's reply received in November 2012. The Government indicates that programmes and actions are being carried out through Social Missions for the inclusion of sectors excluded from the world of work. The Che Guevara Mission has the fundamental objective of the relation between education and work as a consubstantial element in the transformation process. Socio-political training is intended to strengthen the economic and democratic development model of popular participation based on solidarity, while technical and productive training is aimed at developing knowledge, aptitudes, skills, attitudes and values. The Madres del Barrio Mission is a comprehensive strategy to encourage the integration into the world of work of women in situations of extreme poverty. The aims of the Mission include facilitating social processes of socio-productive inclusion both for beneficiary mothers and for other members of the family. For that purpose, guidance is provided to mothers to help them formulate socio-productive proposals in Madres del Barrio committees. The Knowledge and Labour Mission is a training initiative which combines education and work, through which 1,002,537 individuals were included in various training initiatives as of March 2012. The ASI indicates that it is necessary to maximize the productive potential of the country by taking advantage of the increase in the potential supply of labour. In economic terms, the country is in a situation of stagnation, inflation, deindustrialization, with excessive monitoring and control of private economic activity. Labour policy is implemented separately from economic policy. Employment plans are not integrated into macroeconomic planning. The Committee once again expresses interest in examining information on the impact of the measures adopted in the context of the Economic and Social Development Plan, 2007–13, in relation to the generation of productive, stable and high-quality employment (Article 1 of the Convention). The Committee also asks the Government to provide specific examples of the manner in which the views of employers' and workers' organizations and of other persons affected have been taken into account in the formulation, implementation and review of employment policies and programmes (Article 3). The Committee hopes that the information provided in the next report will provide a basis for examining the manner in which persons who have participated in the social missions have obtained productive employment in the labour market.

Situation, level and trends of employment. The Government included in its report data on the employment situation, level and trends. The Committee observes that in July 2012 the total activity rate rose to 64 per cent, the occupation rate was estimated at 92.1 per cent and the formality rate was 58.4 per cent. In July 2012, the estimated formality rate of 58.4 per cent was equivalent to an increase of 1.4 percentage points in relation to the data for July 2011. The ASI emphasizes that within the informal sector categories there was an increase in non-professional self-employed workers. Moreover, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC), in its Economic Survey of Latin America and the Caribbean, 2010–11, observed an increase in the unemployment rate in 2010 in relation to the previous year, with a rise from 7.8 per cent to 8.6 per cent on average, with higher unemployment being recorded in each of the four quarters of the year compared with the same periods in 2009. The average unemployment rate in the first semester of 2011 and 2012 was estimated at 8.8 per cent. According to ECLAC, there was also a slight increase in employment informality, which rose from 44 per cent in 2009 to 44.5 per cent in 2010. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing information on the situation, level and trends of employment, disaggregated by sex. It would also welcome information on the manner in which labour market data were used as a basis for regularly reviewing the employment policy measures adopted as an integral part of a coordinated economic and social policy with a view to achieving the objectives of the Convention (Article 2). The Committee reiterates its interest in examining information indicating the results of the measures adopted to facilitate a progressive transfer of workers from the informal to the formal economy.

Youth employment. The Government refers in its report to a reform of the Employment Benefit Scheme Act, under which it would be a requirement for enterprises to include young people at the rate of 2.5 per cent of their workforce, both for employers in the public sector and for private sector enterprises. The ASI indicates that in August 2011 the National Statistical Institute reported a youth unemployment rate of 16.4 per cent. Nevertheless, the total number of young persons in difficulties in terms of poverty is reported to be 554,000, of whom 157,000 live in households where the income is no higher than the cost of the basic food basket. Young persons work in the commercial and services sectors, and many in retail, which are low productivity sectors with a tendency to generate employment under precarious conditions. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on youth employment trends, including statistics disaggregated by age and sex. The Committee invites the Government to include an assessment of the active policy measures implemented to minimize the impact of unemployment on young persons and to facilitate their lasting integration into the labour market, particularly in the case of the most underprivileged categories of young persons.

Development of small and medium-sized enterprises. The Government indicates that the National Institute for the Development of Small and Medium-Sized Industry (INAPYMI) has initiated the operation of a Geographical Information System (SIG) with a view to registering the data of small and medium-sized industries and national social property units. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the impact of the measures adopted to promote productivity and a conducive climate for employment generation by small and medium-sized enterprises.

Article 2 of the Convention. National policy on vocational rehabilitation and employment of persons with disabilities. The Committee notes the Government's report received in August 2012 in reply to the 2010 observation. The Committee notes with interest that a consultative process led to the formulation of a draft policy on persons with disabilities, which is under consideration by stakeholders. Through the policy, the Government intends to mainstream and integrate issues pertaining to disability to ensure that vocational rehabilitation and employment of persons with disabilities is given due attention. The draft policy provides for strategic measures for creating an enabling environment for the promotion, advancement and social integration of persons with disabilities. Other measures envisaged include the provision of tools and financing for income-generating projects of persons with disabilities. The Government also indicates that the draft policy proposes joint planning, effective and efficient intersectoral and interministerial collaboration in order to, inter alia, collect data on persons with disabilities. It further indicates that it has yet to undertake the survey which had been proposed for 2010 on persons with disabilities. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the adoption of the national policy on persons with disabilities and details of the implementation of the vocational rehabilitation and employment component of this policy. The Committee would also welcome receiving statistics and relevant data, as much as possible, disaggregated by age, sex and nature of the disability, as well as extracts of reports, studies and inquiries concerning the matters covered by the Convention (Part V of the report form).

Article 3. Promotion of employment opportunities in the open labour market. The Government indicates that the draft national policy on persons with disabilities provides for a quota system to enable people to access rehabilitative education and training for better employment prospects. The Government indicates that 41 students are enrolled in courses within the Danhiko Rehabilitation Centre on electronics, information technology, wood technology and clothing design. The centre has the capacity to enrol up to 80 students per year at various levels. The Committee invites the Government to include information on the implementation of the quota system and its impact on improving employment opportunities of persons with disabilities in the open labour market.

Article 4. Equal opportunity and treatment. In reply to the Committee's comments, the Government indicates that there are no reported court cases or other relevant decisions on discrimination on the basis of disability. The Committee invites the Government to indicate any special positive measures aimed at effective equality of opportunity and treatment between persons with disabilities, whether women or men, and other workers.

Article 7. Vocational rehabilitation and employment services. The Government indicates that existing employment services, including career guidance and counselling, are adapted to suit the needs of persons with disabilities. Information on career prospects is shared with students with disabilities on the choices they can make in their career paths. The Committee observes that emphasis is placed on the understanding that disability is not inability. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the impact of measures taken to allow persons with disabilities to secure, retain and advance in employment.

Article 8. Access to services in rural areas and remote communities. The Government indicates that the National Employment Service Department provides career guidance and counselling services in rural schools and will continue intensifying resource mobilization efforts to secure adequate resources needed for extensive coverage of rural schools. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report information on how vocational rehabilitation and employment services are available to persons with disabilities in rural areas and remote communities.

Article 9. Suitably qualified staff. The Government indicates that there are various training programmes for rehabilitation counsellors, staff members and instructors at the Danhiko Rehabilitation Centre. For example, the centre has trained nurses and physiotherapists. All experts at the centre undergo training in sign language and adaptive training methods in theory and practice. The centre also trains students with disabilities in order to meet their personal aspirations and employs some of them upon completion of their studies. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the various training programmes for rehabilitation counsellors and other suitably qualified staff in the other rehabilitation centres.

Paid Educational Leave Convention, 1974 (No. 140) (ratification: 1992)

Definition. Policy to promote the granting of paid educational leave. In reply to the comments that it has been making for many years, the Committee notes the detailed information on the Bolsa de Qualificação Profissional provided in a Government report received in November 2011. The Government indicates that, in accordance with the provisions adopted in November 1998 and August 2001, the Bolsa Qualificação consists of a benefit provided to workers who are temporarily unemployed in accordance with the provisions of collective agreements. The Committee observes that the Convention requires member States to formulate and apply a policy designed to promote, by methods appropriate to national conditions and practice, the granting of paid educational leave for the purpose of training, general, social and civic education, and trade union education. The Committee invites the Government to provide detailed replies in its next report on the matters raised in the report form, with an indication in each case of the conditions that have to be met by workers to benefit from paid educational leave, the duration of such leave and the level of the financial benefits provided (Articles 2, 3 and 10 of the Convention).

Coordination of the policy to promote the granting of paid educational leave with general policies. The Committee invites the Government to indicate in its next report the measures adopted for the coordination of the national policy on paid educational leave with general policies on employment, education and training, and hours of work (Article 4).

Guinea

Paid Educational Leave Convention, 1974 (No. 140) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its 2006 direct request, which read as follows:

Policy for the promotion of paid educational leave and its application in practice. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information to demonstrate that it has formulated and that it applies, in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention, a policy designed to promote the granting of paid educational leave for the various purposes of training and education specified. The Committee also asks the Government to describe the manner in which public authorities, employers' and workers' organizations, and institutions providing education and training are associated with the formulation of the policy for the promotion of paid educational leave (Article 6). Lastly, the Committee invites the Government to communicate all reports, studies, inquiries and statistics which will allow it to assess the extent of the application of the Convention in practice (Part V of the report form).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Formulation and implementation of education and training policies. In reply to its previous comments, the Government indicates that there are no coordination structures linking the three ministries responsible for the implementation of vocational guidance and training policies and programmes. The Government's report received in June 2004 enumerates the technical and vocational training institutions that exist. It also provides information concerning the implementation of the "employment" component of the Poverty Reduction Strategy approved in 2002. The Committee refers, in this respect, to the comments on the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), and asks the Government to indicate the manner in which the measures adopted or envisaged in the context of the Poverty Reduction Strategy reinforce the links between education, training and employment, particularly through the employment services. It asks the Government to provide information in its next report on the efforts being made to secure coordination among the various institutions responsible for developing comprehensive and coordinated policies and programmes of vocational guidance and vocational training. It draws attention once more to the importance of social dialogue in preparing, implementing and reviewing a national human resources development, education and training policy. It would be grateful if the Government would also provide practical information on levels of instruction, qualifications and training activities so that it can assess the application of all the provisions of the Convention in practice.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guyana

Paid Educational Leave Convention, 1974 (No. 140) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session and that it will contain full information on the matters raised in its 2003 direct request:

The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which the various training programmes and plans implement paid educational leave, as provided for by the Convention. It also hopes that the Government will be in a position to provide statistics on the number of workers in both the public and private sectors who have benefited from paid educational leave during the period covered by the next report (Part V of the report form).

The Committee requests the Government to indicate the arrangements for the participation of employers' and workers' organizations in the formulation and application of the policy for the promotion of paid education leave (Article 6 of the Convention).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Zimbabwe

Paid Educational Leave Convention, 1974 (No. 140) (ratification: 1998)

Granting paid educational leave. The Committee notes the Government's report received in August 2012 in reply to the matters raised in its 2010 observation. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the concern expressed by the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) with respect to the lack of minimum standards regarding paid educational leave in the private sector, since the Labour Act had no relevant provisions on the subject. The Committee notes with interest that, pursuant to tripartite consultations, it was agreed to incorporate the principles enshrined in Convention No. 140 into the Labour Act through the inclusion of paid educational leave in the list of areas for collective bargaining under section 74(3) of the Labour Act. The Government also indicates that it has identified with the social partners the need to formulate a policy in line with the Convention. It is expected that consultations towards the formulation of the policy will commence in the near future. The Committee notes the examples provided by the Government on paid educational leave in the private sector. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report relevant information related to the formulation of a policy designed to promote the granting of paid educational leave in association with employers' and workers' organizations (Articles 2–6 of the Convention). It also invites the Government to include detailed information on effective tripartite consultations held to coordinate the national policy and their results (Article 4).

Article 7 of the Convention. Financial arrangements. The Government indicates that the envisaged national policy on paid educational leave will provide for financial arrangements as well as for surveys to determine the amount of funds available for paid educational leave. The Committee invites the Government to indicate in its next report the measures envisaged within the national policy to finance arrangements for paid educational leave.

Article 8. Discrimination. The Government indicates that the envisaged national policy on paid educational leave will provide for measures to ensure that all workers have equal access to paid educational leave. Referring to its comments on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), the Committee invites the Government to indicate in its next report the measures envisaged within the national policy to ensure that all workers have equal access to paid educational leave.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 140 (San Marino); Convention No. 142 (El Salvador, Guyana, Ireland).

Portugal

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1995)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in October 2011 for the period ending May 2011, including replies to its 2006 observation. The Committee also notes the observations received in October 2011 from the General Workers' Union (UGT) and the General Confederation of Portuguese Workers – National Trade Unions (CGTP-IN). The Committee notes that new provisions regulating the termination of employment of public service employees were introduced in the framework of the 2008 legislative reform of the public sector with a view to align the civil service and private sector employment regimes. It also notes that a new Labour Code has been adopted by Act No. 7/2009 of 12 February 2009. Moreover, the 2009 amendments to the Code of Labour Procedure (Decree Law No. 480/99) introduced a new regulation of the judicial procedure applicable to claims for unfair dismissal. The Committee notes with interest that the provisions of the 2009 Labour Code have reinforced the grounds that constitute invalid reasons for termination. Section 381(d) of the Labour Code provides that the dismissal is invalid when the opinion of the Commission for Equality in Labour and Employment has not been sought before dismissing any pregnant worker, any worker who has recently given birth or who is breastfeeding, or any worker during initial parental leave (Article 5 of the Convention). The Committee observes the CGTP-IN's indication that the Constitutional Court decision No. 338/2010 of September 2010 declared section 356(1) of the 2009 Labour Code (which provided that giving evidence during the procedure of dismissal was discretionary) as unconstitutional, on the grounds of violating the principles of the right to defence and protection of employment security enshrined in the National Constitution. The Committee notes that in the context of structural adjustment measures adopted since March 2011, the Government undertook reforms in the employment protection system, including amendments to the regulation of individual dismissals and the reduction of severance payments. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report an evaluation of the impact of the reduction of termination benefits by the legislative reforms of 2011 in terms of maintaining and creating employment. In this respect, the Committee invites the Government to provide updated information on the intervention of the labour authorities in cases of collective dismissals (Part V of the report form). The Government indicates that following the monitoring activities of the Working Conditions Authority, 178 infringements of the requirements for collective dismissals were sanctioned in 2010, which involved 8,223 workers in 98 businesses. In the same year, 197 infringements regarding dismissal for the abolition of the job position were sanctioned, which involved 4,065 workers in 162 businesses. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on the activities of the Working Conditions Authority and the labour inspectorate on the matters covered by the Convention.

Article 2(3) of the Convention. Adequate safeguards in case of recourse to contracts of employment for a specified period. In reply to previous comments, the Government supplied statistical information on the rate of fixed-term employment contracts concluded between 2006 and 2009 (around 29 per cent in 2009, approximately 830,000 contracts). The CGTP-IN indicates that the 2009 Labour Code has expanded the cases in which a fixed-term employment contract may be stipulated, such as through providing the possibility of very short-term contracts for seasonal agricultural activities and touristic events (section 142 of the 2009 Labour Code). The Government indicates that, according to the 2009 Labour Code, fixed-term employment contracts may be renewed up to three times and their total duration may not exceed three years (section 148 of the Labour Code). Section 393 of the 2009 Labour Code provides that where the dismissal of a worker employed under a fixed-term contract is declared invalid, the employer shall be condemned to reinstate the worker (if the contract expires after a definitive court decision) and compensate her/him for patrimonial and non-patrimonial damages. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the manner in which the protection provided by the Convention is concretely ensured to workers who have concluded an employment contract for a specified period and the number of workers affected by these measures. Please provide copies of court decisions by which tribunals have dealt with this issue.

Article 2(5). Micro-enterprises. In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government indicates that the procedure for dismissal in micro-enterprises is regulated by the same provisions applicable to other enterprises except for the intervention of work councils in the procedure of dismissal (section 358 of the 2009 Labour Code). The Committee notes that as a general rule, the 2009 Labour Code provides that when termination is unjustified, the court shall automatically order the reinstatement of the worker. It is then up to the worker who may opt for compensation in lieu of reinstatement (sections 389(1) and 391 of the Labour Code). As an exception to this rule, where the dismissal concerns workers in micro-enterprises or workers holding managerial positions, the employer may request the court to exclude reinstatement of those workers based on circumstances, which would render the worker's return seriously prejudicial and disruptive to the enterprise's functioning. When reinstatement is excluded, the worker has the right to compensation (section 392 of the 2009 Labour Code). The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on the application of the Convention to micro-enterprises.

Article 8. Time limit for the appeal procedure. The CGTP-IN indicates that the time limit under the 2009 Labour Code for bringing a claim for unfair dismissal before the court, i.e. 60 days compared to one year before the 2009 reform, is too short as it does not allow workers to submit the dispute to labour mediation. The CGTP-IN also indicates that the amendments to the Code of Labour Procedure make dismissal less expensive because the State is responsible for paying interim wages whenever the legal procedure lasts for more than a year (section 98-N of the Code of Labour Procedure). In the CGTP-IN's view, this measure is likely to promote dismissals, removing any reservation the employer might have against being involved in a lawsuit. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of the provisions of the Code of Labour Procedure regulating claims for unfair dismissal. It also requests the Government to include updated information on the outcome of appeals against unjustified termination, the average time for an appeal to be decided and the roles of mediation and arbitration in resolving issues related to the Convention.

Burden of proof. The UGT indicates that under the 2009 Labour Code, the worker's guarantees in the judicial procedure were strengthened to the extent that the worker may challenge dismissal through filing an application and submitting it to court. The employer has to prove that the termination was lawful (section 387(2) of the 2009 Labour Code and sections 98-C and 98-D of the Code of Labour Procedure). The Committee also notes that according to section 387(4) of the 2009 Labour Code, the court shall decide on the existence of valid reasons for dismissal alleged by the employer. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the effect given to Article 8(3) of the Convention.

Article 10. Compensation. In the CGTP-IN's view, the relaxed procedural requirements introduced by the 2009 Labour Code and the decrease in sanctions for these requirements, are likely to undermine the guarantee of employment security. The CGTP-IN further indicates that the 2009 Labour Code introduced changes regarding the effects of unlawful dismissal to the extent that dismissals are declared invalid only when the irregularities are not purely procedural. Accordingly, compensation for dismissed workers was reduced. Pursuant to section 389(2) of the 2009 Labour Code, when the court decides that there are valid reasons for dismissal but finds procedural irregularities, the dismissed worker shall only have the right to half the compensation in lieu of reinstatement she/he would have in the case of unjust dismissal. Taking into account the concerns raised by the CGTP-IN, the Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on this issue.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2014.]

Spain

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1985)

In relation with the observation formulated in 2011, the Committee notes the remarks submitted by the Trade Union Confederation of Workers' Committees (CC.OO.) and the trade union confederation General Union of Workers (UGT) in August 2012 on the application of the Convention. It further notes the Government's response to these remarks in September and November 2012. The Committee notes that, at its 316th Session (November 2012), the Governing Body declared receivable a representation alleging non-observance by Spain of Convention No. 158, which the trade union confederations submitted under article 24 of the ILO Constitution. The Committee will therefore continue its examination under article 22 of the ILO Constitution when the proceedings before the Governing Body are closed.

Sweden

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes the Government's detailed report provided for the period ending in June 2011 including complete information in relation to the 2007 observation. Among the legislative amendments made to the Employment Protection Act which entered into force in 2007 and 2008, the Committee notes that a general fixed-term contract becomes a contract for an indefinite period of time when a worker has been employed with the same employer for a total period of two years over a five-year period. Likewise, a fixed-term contract of a worker who has been employed by the same employer as a replacement for a total period of two years (previously three years) also becomes a contract for an indefinite period of time. The Committee further notes the Government's statement that most workers in the Swedish labour market have contracts for an indefinite period of time. The Government further indicates that employment contracts for an indefinite period of time will continue to be the main foundation of the labour market and that fixed-term contracts fulfil the important function of enabling employers to meet temporary needs to increase the available manpower and to replace those temporarily absent. Fixed-term contracts can constitute an important passage into working life for young people and for those without or with limited work experience. Other measures taken by the Government to increase the protection resulting from the Convention include a new provision in the Employment Protection Act to provide that if fixed-term contracts or contracts for probation pursuant to the Employment Protection Act are abused, the workers concerned would be entitled to obtain a judicial declaration that the employment contract is valid for an indefinite period of time (Article 2(2) and (3) of the Convention). The Committee also notes the data provided by the Government on the activities of the Labour Court and the Discrimination Ombudsman. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing relevant information on the manner in which the provisions of the Convention are applied in practice, including extracts of relevant judicial decisions involving questions regarding the application of the Convention, available statistics on the activities of the Labour Courts and the Discrimination Ombudsman and on the number of terminations for economic or similar reasons in the country (Parts IV and V of the report form).

Turkey

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1995)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in November 2011 in reply to its previous comments. It also notes the various relevant decisions of the Ninth Chamber of the Court of Cassation supplied by the Government on the matters covered by the Convention. The Committee further notes the observations of the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İS) and the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TİSK) on the application of the Convention. The Committee notes that the new Code of Obligations (Act No. 6098 dated 11 January 2011) entered into force in July 2012. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the application of the new provisions of the Code of Obligations on the matters covered by the Convention. It would welcome continuing to receive the remarks of the Government and the social partners on the application of the Convention in practice and examples of court rulings concerning questions of principle related to the Convention (Part V of the report form).

Follow-up to the recommendations of the tripartite committee (representation made under article 24 of the Constitution of the ILO). In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government indicates that Maritime Labour Law No. 854 has not been amended to cover employment protection of seafarers. The Committee recalls that in its conclusions adopted in November 2000, the tripartite committee set up by the Governing Body to examine a representation under article 24 of the ILO Constitution noted that the laws regulating the employment of seafarers did not require a valid reason related to capacity, conduct or operational requirements for termination. The Committee urges the Government again to take the necessary steps to ensure that seafarers are afforded the protection under the Convention and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard in its next report.

Article 2(2) and (3) of the Convention. Adequate safeguards against recourse to contracts of employment for a specified period of time. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the safeguards provided in Labour Law No. 4857 against the abuse of different types of contracts. The Committee notes TİSK's indication that the Labour Law attaches extremely harsh conditions to the use of employment contracts for a specified period of time. Moreover, the Court of Cassation strictly applies the provisions of the Labour Law regulating these contracts. Accordingly, even if there is an objective reason for stipulating a fixed-term contract, the Court does not hold that the contract is stipulated for a specified period of time if the date of termination of such contract is not clear. The party claiming that the employment contract has been stipulated for a specific period of time has the burden to prove this circumstance. The Committee notes TÜRK-İS's concern that especially for auxiliary jobs some employers tend to stipulate contracts for a specified period of time with the aim of avoiding employment protection provisions. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide examples of court decisions on the safeguards provided in the Labour Law against recourse to contracts for a specified period.

Article 2(4)–(6). Categories of employees excluded from the Convention. The Committee recalls that under section 18 of the Labour Law, employees in businesses employing less than 30 workers, employees with less than six months' employment and employees holding a managerial position are excluded from the employment protection provisions of the Law – i.e. in terminating employees the employer does not have to depend on a valid reason. Under section 17 of the Labour Law, if the contracts of these categories of workers are terminated in bad faith, they are entitled to compensation equal to three times the notice period plus the compensation in lieu of notice if the notice period has not been respected. The Committee notes TÜRK-İS's indication that, as a positive and important development, a decision of the Court of Cassation of 26 May 2005 stated that although section 18 of the Labour Law establishes the limit of 30 employees, if the number of workers in an establishment is less than 30, the collective agreement in an establishment may provide that employment protection provisions are applicable regardless of the number of employees. The aforementioned decision has been confirmed by subsequent jurisprudence. The Committee further notes TİSK's indication that certain grounds listed under the Convention, such as filing a complaint against the employer (Article 5(c)), are also applicable to employees that are excluded from the employment protection provisions of the Labour Law, to the extent that these grounds are accepted by the courts as being in "bad faith", thereby rendering the worker entitled to compensation. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on any developments in law and practice concerning the categories of workers excluded from the employment protection provisions of the Labour Law. It also invites the Government to include in its next report information on the impact of the decisions of the Court of Cassation on the application of the Convention.

Article 10. Remedies in case of invalid termination. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Turkish Employment Agency (İŞKUR) required workers who win their lawsuits for unfair dismissal to pay back the unemployment benefits they received during adjudication. The Committee notes TİSK's concern that a worker whose proceedings lasted for more than four months who received four months' wages pursuant to section 21 of the Labour Law would be financially disadvantaged if required to pay back the unemployment benefits paid for the period exceeding four months. In this regard, the Committee notes with interest the decision of the Court of Cassation of 5 April 2010 stating that when an appeal procedure for unfair dismissal lasts more than four months, the repayment by the worker winning the lawsuit of unemployment benefits received during adjudication is unlawful as it contravenes the Unemployment Insurance Law No. 4447 and the principles of social security. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on the application of Article 10 of the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2014.]

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 158 (Democratic Republic of the Congo, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Montenegro, Saint Lucia, Slovakia, Slovenia, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Uganda, Ukraine, Yemen).

Wages

Minimum Wage Fixing Machinery (Agriculture) Convention, 1951 (No. 99) (ratification: 1953)

Article 3(4) of the Convention. Differentiated minimum wage rates based on age. The Committee notes the comments made by the Federal Chamber of Labour (BAK) according to which pay practices consisting in paying lower wages to employees under 18 years of age than those paid to adult employees constitute inadmissible discrimination on grounds of age. The BAK refers to a number of judicial decisions which have confirmed that wage differentials based on age are discriminatory and considers that the debate which goes to the very heart of equality of treatment in employment and occupation is still topical. The BAK also criticizes the Government's view that minors can only be employed in certain activities and should therefore be paid less, arguing that protective legislation, such as the Federal Minor and Young Worker Employment Act, cannot offer any justification for differentiated remuneration on grounds of age. In this connection, the Committee wishes to recall paragraphs 169–176 of its 1992 General Survey on minimum wages in which it pointed out that the quantity and quality of work carried out should be the decisive factors in determining the wage paid and that the reasons that may have prompted the adoption of lower minimum wage rates for groups of workers on account of their age should be regularly re-examined in the light of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in reply to the observations of the BAK and also to provide copies of any recent judicial decisions on this matter.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1977)

Article 1(2) and (3) of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee recalls its previous comment in which it requested the Government for clarifications on the extension of the coverage of the national minimum wage to agricultural workers. The Committee notes, in this respect, the Government's reference to Act No. 3274 of 9 December 2005, concerning salaried work in Brazilian nut plantations, in particular, section 8 which provides that remuneration may in no case be inferior to the national minimum wage rate. It is still unclear, however, whether rubber and forestry workers remain excluded from minimum wage coverage. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide additional explanations in this respect.

Article 3. Criteria for determining the minimum wage level. The Committee notes the adoption of Supreme Decree No. 1213 of 1 May 2012, which raised the national minimum wage from 815 to 1,000 bolivianos (approximately US$144) per month, that is a 22.7 per cent increase compared to 2011. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the minimum wage is adjusted annually by reference to the inflation rate and that it currently corresponds to twice the amount representing the extreme poverty line (approximately US$1.25 per day). The Committee understands, however, that despite recent increases of the minimum wage, the erosion of the purchasing power of the minimum wage due to rising basic commodity prices does not permit low-paid workers to cover their subsistence needs in terms of essential consumer goods, housing, health, clothing, or hygiene. The Committee notes, for instance, that the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights expressed concern about the fact that the minimum wage continued to be insufficient to provide workers and their families with a decent standard of living (see UN Doc. E/C.12/BOL/CO/2 of 8 August 2008, paragraphs 14 and 27). The Committee accordingly requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the manner in which the subsistence needs of workers and their families are calculated, including for instance the collection of labour statistics or the compilation of data for defining the basket of basic consumer goods, and the bodies or agencies responsible for conducting the relevant surveys and studies.

Article 4(2) and (3). Full consultation with, and direct participation of, the social partners. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to ensure genuine and effective consultations with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations in all matters related to minimum wage fixing. The Committee notes the Government's explanations concerning the annual readjustment of the national minimum wage rate by means of supreme decrees but observes that no progress has been made with respect to tripartite consultations which is one of the essential obligations of the Convention. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take prompt action towards ensuring full consultation with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations and their direct participation in the operation of the minimum wage fixing machinery. The Committee also requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any progress made concerning the establishment of the National Council on Labour Relations to which reference was made in the Government's previous report.

Article 5. Adequate inspection. Further to its previous comment regarding the possible amendment of section 121 of the General Labour Act so as to provide for truly dissuasive fines in case of non-compliance with the minimum wage legislation, the Committee understands that no real progress has been made. The Committee also understands that difficulties are experienced with the enforcement of the minimum wage legislation, in particular, in the Chaco region. It notes, in this regard, the recommendations of the multi-agency mission of the United Nations Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues, following its 2009 visit regarding the need to carry out adequate and timely labour inspections within the Chaco region and ensuring that indigenous workers are not paid less than the minimum wage (see UN Doc. E/C.19/2010/6, paragraphs 35 and 40). The Committee accordingly requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged in order to: (i) ensure that the labour legislation provides for appropriate sanctions against the infringement of minimum wages; and (ii) reinforce the labour inspection services so as to effectively prevent such infringements, especially with regard to indigenous workers.

Brazil

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes that the Government's report provides detailed information on the legislation governing the conditions of employment of federal public servants, which are not really relevant to the scope and purpose of this Convention. The Committee recalls that the primary objective of the Convention is to guarantee appropriate levels of wages and decent working conditions for workers employed for the execution of public contracts, that is to say contracts concluded by a government authority and involving the expenditure of public funds. The Convention therefore requires that labour clauses be included in public contracts in order to ensure that the workers concerned enjoy wages and other working conditions not less favourable than those established by law, collective agreement or arbitration award for work of the same nature in the same district. As explained in the Practical Guide prepared by the Office in 2008 (page 17), Convention No. 94 is about procurement contracts in the public sector, not about the employment contracts of public employees. The Committee recalls that it has been drawing the Government's attention to the main requirements of the Convention for more than a decade and has been suggesting measures to supplement the public procurement legislation, especially section 44 of Act No. 8666 of 1993 and Normative Instruction No. 8 of 1994. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to take action in order to bring its legislation into full conformity with the requirements of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Bulgaria

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1955)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report concerning the latest amendments to the Public Procurement Act and implementing Regulations and Ordinances, especially as regards the appeals procedure and the grounds of nullity of public procurement contracts. It also notes the Government's explanations concerning the assistance to tenderers provided by the Public Procurement Agency (PPA), including through direct consultations, written replies to individual requests, hot phone lines and electronic services.

The Committee observes, however, that the Government's report does not contain any references to legislative or administrative measures implementing the specific requirements of the Convention, the only relevant provision in the current legislation being section 56(1)(11) of the Public Procurement Act which requires tenderers to declare when bidding that they have taken into consideration the minimum labour cost requirements. The Committee further notes that the standardized public procurement contract available on PPA's website does not contain any clauses concerning the terms of employment and working conditions of workers engaged in the execution of public contracts.

The Committee therefore regrets that the Government has still not taken any steps to give effect to the basic requirements of the Convention, namely: (i) the insertion in all public contracts falling within the scope of Article 1 of the Convention of labour clauses – drafted after consultation with employers' and workers' organizations – ensuring to the workers concerned wages and other working conditions not less favourable than those established for work of the same character in the same area by collective agreement, arbitration award or national laws or regulations; (ii) the notification of the terms of the clauses, by advertising specifications or otherwise; (iii) the posting of notices in conspicuous places at the workplace with a view to informing the workers of their conditions of work; and (iv) the effective enforcement through a system of inspection and adequate sanctions, including the withholding of contracts and the withholding of payments, for failure to observe and apply the provisions of labour clauses.

In this connection, the Committee wishes once more to refer to its General Survey of 2008 concerning labour clauses in public contracts, in which it indicated that the idea behind the adoption of minimum labour standards in the field of public procurement is that public authorities should concern themselves with the working conditions under which the operations in question are carried out. The concern stems from the fact that government contracts are usually awarded to the lowest bidder and that contractors may be tempted, in view of the competition involved, to economize on labour costs. The Committee also indicated that the insertion of appropriate labour clauses has the effect of setting as minimum conditions for the contract standards that are already established within the locality, and that labour costs are thus removed from competition between bidders (paragraphs 2 and 40). While recognizing the Government's efforts in promoting conditions of fair competition and transparency in public procurement operations, the Committee stresses that, under this Convention, the Government is also under the obligation to ensure that workers employed by a contractor and paid indirectly out of public funds enjoy wages and conditions of labour which are at least as satisfactory as the wages and conditions of labour normally established for the type of work concerned, which implies that local standards higher than those of general application should be applied, where they exist. The Committee again urges the Government to take without further delay all necessary action in order to give full effect to the Convention and to keep the Office informed of any progress made in this regard.

Burundi

Article 3 of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing machinery. The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU), dated 30 August 2012, concerning the application of the Convention. COSYBU considers that the Convention is a dead letter as the interoccupational guaranteed minimum wage (SMIG) has not been revised since the 1980s. COSYBU indicates that it is regrettable and scandalous to continue to have the SMIG officially fixed at 160 Burundian francs (approximately US$0.10) per day in urban centres and at 105 Burundian francs (approximately US$0.07) per day in rural areas and asks the Government to readjust the SMIG level as a matter of urgency. In this connection, the Committee recalls the Government's indications in earlier reports that the readjustment of the national minimum wage is part of the broader revision process of the Labour Code and also conditional on the preparation of a preliminary study in this matter. Under these circumstances, the Committee is obliged to conclude that the minimum wage fixing process provided for in sections 74 (Ministerial ordinances fixing minimum wages ensuring fair remuneration to workers) and 249 (annual revision of the minimum wages by the tripartite National Labour Council) of the Labour Code is no longer implemented in practice. The Committee requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in response to the observations of COSYBU. The Committee also asks the Government to take all necessary measures in order to reactivate the minimum wage fixing process in full consultation with the social partners and proceed to the long overdue readjustment of the interoccupational guaranteed minimum wage.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. Further to its previous observation, the Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 1/01 of 4 February 2008 concerning the Code on Public Procurement. The new public procurement legislation regulates the award, execution and supervision of all public contracts on the basis of equality of treatment and transparency. It also establishes two organs, the National Directorate for oversight of public procurement operations (DNCMP) and the Regulatory Authority of public procurement (ARMP) which are responsible for ensuring compliance with laws and regulations in respect of public contracting. The Committee notes, however, that the Code on Public Procurement does not provide for the insertion of labour clauses as prescribed by this Article of the Convention. In fact, the only provision which appears to address labour matters in relation to the public procurement process is section 55(1)(a) of the Code which excludes from public tendering persons who have not been regular in the payment of taxes, contributions and other dues of all kinds and who cannot produce a certificate of the administrative authority concerned showing compliance with those obligations. The Committee refers, in this respect, to paragraphs 117–118 of the General Survey of 2008 on labour clauses in public contracts in which it pointed out that the Convention does not relate to some general eligibility criteria of individuals or enterprises bidding for public contracts but requires a labour clause to be expressly included in the actual contract that is finally signed by the procuring entity and the selected contractor. Similarly, certification may offer some proof about tenderers' past performance including respect for social obligations but carries no binding commitment with regard to prospective operations as labour clauses do. Noting that the Government in its last report had announced its intention to take appropriate action in order to bring its legislation into full conformity with the Convention, the Committee hopes that the necessary steps will be taken without further delay. Noting also that Decree No. 100/120 of 18 August 1990 on general conditions of contract will cease to apply upon the entry into force of the new Code on Public Procurement, the Committee requests the Government to transmit the text of the new general conditions of contract once they have been adopted. Moreover, the Committee requests the Government to clarify whether Presidential Decree No. 100/49 of 11 July 1986 on specific measures to guarantee minimum conditions to workers employed by a public contractor – which reproduces in essence the provisions of Article 2 of the Convention without, however, referring expressly to labour clauses – is still in force and, if so, how the application of section 2 of that Decree is ensured in practice.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Cameroon

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1962)

Article 2 of the Convention. Inspection of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee refers to its previous comments and observes that the Government provides no fresh information other than that a new Government Procurement Ministry has been established to be responsible for updating procurement legislation, and, in particular, for drawing up a new Public Procurement Code to replace the present one, adopted in 2004.

Recalling that the Government in the report submitted in 2009 stated that validation of the preliminary draft of the Public Procurement Code was under way, the Committee points out that the provisions of the new code must prescribe that labour clauses must be included as an integral part of public contracts to ensure that workers employed in enterprises performing public contracts enjoy the same working conditions as those established for work of the same character in the trade or industry concerned in the district where the work is carried on. Furthermore, the terms of the clauses and any variations thereof must be determined by the competent national authority after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, in accordance with Article 2(3) of the Convention. The Committee wishes to point out, in this connection, that not only must public contracts include labour clauses (Article 2), but the legislation must require the posting of notices in conspicuous places at workplaces in order to inform the workers of their conditions of work (Article 4(a)(iii)) and prescribe adequate sanctions either by the withholding of contracts or by the withholding of payments due under the contract (Article 5). Accordingly, the Committee asks the Government without further delay to take the necessary steps – either in the course of revising the Public Procurement Code or through administrative measures taken by the Public Procurement Regulation Agency (ARMP) – to ensure the inclusion in all public contracts to which the Convention applies of labour clauses ensuring that workers employed in the performance of such contracts have wages and other conditions of labour which are at least as favourable as the best minimum standards established in the same district by collective agreement, arbitration award or national laws or regulations for work of the same character carried on in the same branch of activity, as required by Article 2 of the Convention. It also requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any progress in the revision of the 2004 Public Procurement Code and to send a copy of the new text as soon as it has been adopted.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1960)

Article 8(1) of the Convention. Deductions from wages. In its previous comments, the Committee took note of the observations of 9 September 2011 by the General Union of Workers of Cameroon (UGTC) and those of 20 October 2011 by the Cameroon Trade Union Congress (CTUC). These organizations allege irregularities in the wage deductions made by the National Social Insurance Fund (CNPS) and failure to involve the National Consultative Labour Commission. The Committee notes that the Government's latest report contains no fresh information in response to the comments by the two organizations and makes no further reference to the process of revision to bring section 75 of the Labour Code into line with this Article of the Convention. While stressing that social dialogue is of fundamental importance in the implementation of the provisions of international labour Conventions, the Committee points out that ultimate responsibility for alignment of the legislation with the Convention lies with the Government. It again asks the Government to send all relevant information on the measures taken to bring the legislation into line with the Convention on this point. Furthermore, it requests the Government to send to the Office copies of any draft amendments to section 75(1) of the Labour Code, reportedly submitted for examination to the National Consultative Labour Commission.

Article 12(1). Payment of wages at regular intervals. The Committee notes that in response to its previous comments, the Government states that the wage arrears due to former employees of privatized state enterprises are being paid as cases are dealt with, as agreed with the social partners, and according to budget availability. With regard to numerical data, the Government indicates that these will be sent to the Office at a later date as soon as they become available. The Committee understands that there are still difficulties in paying public sector wages on a regular basis, for example some contractual staff in the public service have received no pay for about two years. The Committee again asks the Government to provide detailed information on the problems of wage arrears that the Committee has raised in its comments since 2008, particularly with regard to the public sector, including the total amount of wage arrears, the operation of the special commission set up to calculate and settle the wage entitlements and arrears of former employees of state and semi-public enterprises, and any other measures taken or envisaged with a view to settling all outstanding payments and preventing the recurrence of similar problems in the future.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

Comoros

Minimum Wage Fixing Machinery (Agriculture) Convention, 1951 (No. 99) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(1) of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing machinery. Further to its previous observation, the Committee notes the Government's explanations that confirm that no progress has been made either with respect to the promulgation of the decree fixing the guaranteed inter-occupational minimum wage (SMIG) at 35,000 KMF (approximately US$110) per month or as regards the reactivation of the Higher Council of Labour and Employment (CSTE). The Government indicates that the draft decree establishing the SMIG rate for the entire private sector, including agriculture, has not yet received the final approval of the President and that the Ministry of Labour is currently taking steps to successfully complete this process. The Government also indicates that tripartite consultations within the CSTE are expected to resume after the adoption of the revised Labour Code which, in turn, is scheduled to be discussed at the next ordinary session of the National Assembly. Regrettably, the Committee is once again obliged to observe that the Convention is presently not applied in either law or practice. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary action without further delay with a view to: (i) establishing and implementing the guaranteed inter-occupational minimum wage rate; and (ii) initiating tripartite consultations within the CSTE on its periodic review and adjustment. It also asks the Government to transmit a copy of the revised Labour Code as soon as it is adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Costa Rica

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1960)

Article 3 of the Convention. Payment of wages in legal tender. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's intention to adopt, with the technical assistance of the Office, measures to align section 165 of the Labour Code with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee once again recalls the importance of compliance with Article 3 of the Convention, under the terms of which wages payable in money shall be paid only in legal tender, and payment in the form of promissory notes, vouchers or coupons, or in any other form alleged to represent legal tender, shall be prohibited. It also recalls that the problem of the non-conformity of section 165 of the Labour Code with this provision of the Convention has been the subject of the Committee's comments for many years and was even emphasized in its 2003 General Survey on the protection of wages (paragraph 80). The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will forthwith take the necessary measures to ensure the implementation of the Convention on this point, if necessary with the technical assistance of the Office, and it requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments in this respect.

Article 4(2)(b). Value attributed to allowances in kind. The Committee notes that the Government's latest report, in the same way as the previous report, focuses almost solely on the criteria under which the allowances provided may be qualified as wages in kind. On the precise issue raised by the application of Article 4(2)(b) of the Convention, the Government confines itself to indicating that, in the last resort and in case of doubt, it is for the courts to determine the value of in-kind benefits and that courts cannot take arbitrary decisions.

The Committee, however, observes that section 166 of the Labour Code still establishes as a rule that the value of allowances in kind shall be fixed at a flat rate of 50 per cent of the wage in cash if no other amount has been determined by agreement between the parties. The Committee recalls the requirement of the Convention that the value attributed to allowances in kind shall in all circumstances be fair and reasonable. In this regard, the flat-rate valuation envisaged in section 166 of the Labour Code in the absence of agreement between the parties is not such as to ensure that the value attributed corresponds in practice to the real value of the allowances. As the Government indicates, intervention by a court is only envisaged in cases of doubt and then only following a complaint lodged with the competent bodies (which is often a long and costly procedure). This procedure does not therefore provide for full compliance with this provision of the Convention.

The Committee is therefore bound to recall, as it emphasized in paragraph 159 of its 2003 General Survey on the protection of wages, that "setting an overall limit on the proportion of the money wages which may be replaced by benefits in kind does not in itself resolve the problem of the fair valuation of such benefits and offers little protection to workers from possible exploitative practices". In light of the above, the Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures in the very near future to amend section 166 of the Labour Code so as to ensure that it is in conformity with the Convention, if necessary with the technical assistance of the Office, and requests it to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Articles 3 and 5 of the Convention. Criteria for determining minimum wage levels – Adequate inspection. The Committee notes the Government's reply to the comments made by the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN) alleging inadequate monitoring of compliance with minimum wage legislation due to the limited number of labour inspectors and also emphasizing the need to bring up to date the structure and value of the family basket of goods (both urban and rural) and to strengthen the National Wages Council.

In its response, the Government indicates that major efforts have been made in the last five years for increasing the staffing of the National Inspection Directorate (DNI). The Government also refers to the National Minimum Wages Campaign launched in 2010 with a view to reinforcing the supervision of minimum wage legislation. The Government states that ensuring compliance with minimum wage rates in force has become a national priority and is part of a national strategy for the eradication of extreme poverty. According to the statistical results obtained during the first year of the National Minimum Wages Campaign, from 1 August 2010 to 31 August 2011, 9,770 establishments were inspected, of which 4,161, or 42.6 per cent, were found in breach of the applicable minimum wage legislation. Most of the cases of non-compliance, i.e. 41 per cent, were observed in commerce and agriculture.

While noting these explanations which tend to confirm CTRN's concern about a significant part of the active population receiving wages inferior to the applicable minimum wage, the Committee asks the Government to take all appropriate measures to ensure the effective application of the national legislation relating to minimum wages, including the employment of a sufficient number of adequately trained inspectors and the imposition of truly dissuasive penalties for infringement of the provisions relating to minimum wages.

The Committee also requests the Government to submit its observations with respect to other issues raised by CTRN, including the determination of the "family basket of goods" indicator, and the methodology used by the National Wages Council for the annual readjustment of the minimum wage.

Finally, the Committee would appreciate receiving the Government's response to the point raised in an earlier comment concerning the application of Article 2(1) of the Convention (young workers remunerated at a rate of between 50 and 75 per cent of the minimum wage).

Djibouti

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1 of the Convention. Establishment of minimum wage fixing machinery. Further to its previous comments on the abolition of the system of the guaranteed interoccupational minimum wage (SMIG), the Committee notes the Government's explanations to the effect that this decision was taken under pressure from the International Monetary Fund (IMF), which required the Government to adopt a raft of measures, including liberalization of the labour market, to be the beneficiary of a Structural Adjustment Programme (SAP). The Government adds that it made the choice of deregulation rather than leave the SMIG in place, since the balance of public finances would have been seriously jeopardized and wages would not have been guaranteed, thereby threatening the social peace and stability of the country. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the establishment of minimum wage fixing machinery outside the system of collective bargaining is essential for ensuring effective social protection for workers who are not covered by the rules of collective agreements, and that the Government must take the necessary steps to ensure that collectively agreed minimum wage rates are binding and the application thereof is linked to a system of supervision and effective penalties. The Committee therefore concludes that the situation remains unchanged. Apart from the Government's indication that the matter would be studied by the new National Council for Labour, Employment and Vocational Training (CNT), the Convention is no longer applied either in law or in practice. The CNT was set up pursuant to Decree No. 2008-0023/PR/MESN of 20 January 2008 as a tripartite structure to enable the Government and the social partners to exchange ideas in a free and open manner. In this regard, the Government points out that there is increasing talk of the possibility of reintroducing the SMIG for each branch of economic activity. The Committee requests the Government to supply detailed information on the planned meeting of the CNT and any decisions regarding the reintroduction of the national minimum wage rate.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee asks the Government to submit a detailed report on the state of national law and practice regarding labour clauses in public contracts in the light of recently adopted public procurement legislation, including Act No. 53/AN/09/6ème L of 1 July 2009 establishing the Public Procurement Code and Decrees No. 2010-0083/PRE, No. 2010-349/PRE and No. 2010-0085, all dated 8 May 2010.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 8 and 12 of the Convention. Deductions from wages and payment of wages at regular intervals. The Committee has been commenting for a certain number of years on the provision of the Labour Code permitting wage deductions on the basis of individual agreement and also on difficulties experienced in the public sector concerning the timely payment of wages. The Committee requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on both issues, in the light of the provisions of the Labour Code (Act No. 133/AN/05/5èmeL).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Ecuador

Articles 4(2), 10 and 14(b) of the Convention. Partial payment of wages in kind – Limits to attachment of wages – Wage statements. The Committee has been requesting the Government for several years to indicate the legal provisions, if any, implementing these Articles of the Convention. In the absence of the Government's reply on these points, the Committee is obliged to draw the Government's attention once again to the fact that the general labour legislation does not contain express provisions: (i) regulating the partial payment of wages in kind; (ii) fixing an overall limit to the proportion of wages that may be subject to attachment; and (iii) providing for the issuance of a wage statement at the time of each payment of wages. The Committee, therefore, asks the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that full effect is given to these requirements of the Convention.

Article 12(1). Payment of wages on time and in full. The Committee recalls its previous comment in which it noted the observations of the National Union of Workers of the telephone services body of the Ecuadorian Telecommunications Institute (IETEL) – “17 de mayo” which had been received on 27 September 2005. According to the allegations of that union, more than 5,000 employees of three telecommunication companies had not been paid overtime for work performed on weekly rest days and public holidays during the period 1989–2005, the overall amount due totalling US$88 million. Noting that the Government has still not provided any specific explanations on the merits of the claims put forward by the union or on any action taken to follow up on these claims, the Committee hopes that the Government will provide together with its next report full particulars on the manner in which this dispute has been settled.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

Articles 1, 3 and 4 of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing machinery –Criteria for determining the minimum wage – Consultations with and participation of the social partners. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the establishment of a basic unified wage (salario básico unificado) to serve as a wage floor for all workers in general, including domestic, agricultural, small industry, craft and maquila workers. It also notes that under the Ministerial Agreement No. 249 of 23 December 2010, the basic unified wage was fixed at US$264 per month while Ministerial Agreement No. 369 of 13 January 2012, raised it to US$292 per month.

The Government indicates that the basic unified wage is determined on the basis of criteria such as inflation, productivity and equity with a view to progressively closing down the gap between the minimum wage level and the cost of the family basket of goods (canasta familiar). According to the Government's report, the basic unified wage now covers more than 89 per cent of the cost of the basic family basket of goods, as compared to 65 per cent in 2005.

Moreover, the Committee notes the Government's reference to Ministerial Agreements Nos 117 of 7 July 2010 and 181 of 1 October 2010, which set up 22 sectoral committees regrouping 115 occupational categories for the purpose of better analysing sectoral wage levels and fixing sectoral minimum wages. The Government also refers to Ministerial Agreement No. 255 of 24 December 2010, which set the minimum wage rates for the 22 sectoral committees as from 1 January 2011. Under section 3 of that Agreement, sectoral minimum wages may in no circumstances be lower than the basic unified wage.

While noting these recent developments in the minimum wage fixing process, the Committee observes that current minimum wage levels remain overall insufficient to cover the cost of either the basic or the vital family basket of goods (canasta familiar básica y vital). More concretely, the Committee understands that only certain minimum wage rates set by two of the 22 sectoral committees (i.e. the committees for the mine and the transport sectors) exceed the cost of the vital family basket of goods and only certain minimum wage rates in the transport sector exceed the cost of the basic family basket of goods. The Committee also notes that under the National Welfare Plan 2009–13, the Government's objective is to diminish by 27 per cent the number of workers receiving wages inferior to the minimum vital wage by 2013. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that minimum wages fixed after genuine consultations with employers' and workers' organizations concerned, effectively guarantee a decent standard of living for the workers and their families. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide additional explanations on how the basic unified wage and the sectoral minimum wage rates interact with the concept of “decent salary” referred to in sections 8–10 of the Code of Production, which was adopted in December 2010.

Article 5. Adequate inspection. The Committee understands that the enforcement of the minimum wage legislation is weak as a result of challenges faced by the inspection services and a penalty for non-compliance limited to five times the monthly minimum wage regardless of the seriousness of the offence or the number of workers affected. The Committee asks the Government to provide full particulars on any measures taken or envisaged with a view to reinforcing the labour inspection services and establishing truly dissuasive sanctions to ensure the effective application of the relevant legislation.

Ghana

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee recalls that it has been commenting on the application of the Convention since its ratification by Ghana and notes that the Government is still unable to indicate any real progress in bringing its national legislation into conformity with the requirements of the Convention. The Government makes renewed reference to section 118 of the Labour Act 2003 even though the Committee has already noted that this provision is not strictly relevant to the subject matter of the Convention and does not give effect to Article 2 of the Convention which explicitly requires the insertion of labour clauses in those public procurement contracts meeting the conditions specified in Article 1 of the Convention. In fact, the general principles set out in the Labour Act regarding minimum wage fixing, maximum working hours or occupational safety and health cannot automatically guarantee to the workers concerned labour conditions which are not less favourable than whichever is the most favourable of the three alternatives provided for in the Convention, i.e. collective negotiation, arbitration or legislation.

As the Committee has stated on a number of occasions, the legislation to which the Government refers in most cases lays down minimum standards, for instance as regards wage levels, and does not necessarily reflect the actual working conditions of workers. Thus, if the legislation lays down a minimum wage but workers in a particular profession are actually receiving higher wages, the Convention would require that any workers engaged in the execution of a public contract be entitled to receive the wage that is generally paid rather than the minimum wage prescribed in the legislation. In other terms, the application of the general labour legislation is not enough in itself to ensure the application of the Convention, inasmuch as the minimum standards fixed by law are often improved upon by means of collective agreement or otherwise.

Moreover, the Government refers once more to the fact that individuals or firms are required to obtain labour clearance certificates before they are allowed to tender for public contracts. In this regard, the Committee is bound to recall that the essential purpose of the insertion of labour clauses in public contracts goes beyond the aims of simple certification, as its purpose is to eliminate the negative effects of competitive bidding on the workers' labour conditions. The Convention seeks to ensure the contractor's commitment to apply high standards of social responsibility in the execution of a public contract which is in the process of being awarded and therefore a mere indication that the contractor concerned has no record of labour law violation in previously completed works is not sufficient to meet its requirements. As regards the adoption of the Public Procurement Act 2003, the Committee asks the Government to specify the provisions referring to the labour clearance certificate and also forward a copy of the standard tender document used for this purpose.

In the interest of maintaining a constructive dialogue, the Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate in its next report any concrete measures taken or contemplated to implement the Convention in law and practice, and recalls in this respect that the inclusion of labour clauses in all the public contracts covered by the Convention does not necessarily call for legislative enactment but may also be effected by means of administrative instructions or circulars.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Greece

Article 11 of the Convention. Wage claims as privileged debts in bankruptcy proceedings. Further to its previous comment concerning the functioning of the wage guarantee fund, the Committee notes the Government's explanations about the legal framework regulating its operation, i.e. Act No. 1836/89 and Presidential Decree No. 1/1990 as well as Presidential Decrees No. 151/1999 and No. 40/2007 issued to align the national legislation with relevant EU Directives. The Government indicates that the wage guarantee fund is operated by the management Board of the Manpower Employment Organization (OAED) and is financed through a compulsory employers' contribution, currently set at 0.15 per cent of the worker's remuneration, and a state subsidy. The Fund principally covers claims for up to three months' unpaid wages arising from a contract of employment and falling within the six month period prior to the publication of a court ruling declaring the employer bankrupt. The Government's report also provides statistical data on the expenditure and number of beneficiaries of the Fund for the period 2000–10. According to these statistics, in 2009, the Fund paid a total amount of €1.44 million to 148 beneficiaries while in 2010, a total of €2.57 million were paid to 530 beneficiaries. Noting that a wage guarantee institution is a useful complement to the privileged protection of wage claims afforded by this Article of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to provide additional information, including statistics if available, on the impact the current economic crisis might have on the operation of the fund, particularly as regards its financial sustainability in view of the increasing number of bankruptcies, and any measures taken or envisaged in this respect such as the possible readjustment of the level of the employers' contribution.

Article 12. Timely payment of wages. Prompt settlement of wages upon termination of employment. In its previous comment, the Committee had asked the Government to communicate information on any difficulties experienced in the timely payment of wages, indicating among others the number of workers and the sectors concerned, based on information that problems of non-payment or delayed payment of wages may rise as a result of widespread insolvencies and lack of liquidity. The Committee notes that the Government's report is silent on this point. It observes, however, that according to several sources, the country is experiencing growing difficulties with the regular payment of wages and situations of accumulated wage arrears are reported in several sectors of activity. The Committee notes, for instance, that according to the 2011 activity report of the Labour Inspectorate (SEPE), published in April 2012, the non-payment of wages represents 68.8 per cent of all labour law infringements observed in 2011 and the non-payment of annual holiday pay 20.6 per cent, that is a marked increase compared to 2010 when 50.5 per cent of all violations related to delayed payment or non-payment of wages, 14.8 per cent to non-payment of holiday pay and 5.6 per cent to non-payment of end-of-year bonus. The SEPE report also shows that by reference to the number of reports filed and amount of fines imposed, the situation appears to concern mostly the sectors of retail commerce, restaurants and catering, construction, hotels, and the food industry.

The Committee understands that the deepening economic and social crisis in the country impacts heavily on the business climate and under the circumstances problems of non-payment of wages can only be expected to persist, if not increase. The Committee notes, for instance, that according to a research conducted by the Institute of Small Enterprises (GSEBEE) and published in January 2011, 84.2 per cent of the enterprises reported that their financial situation had worsened in the last semester and 68 per cent foresaw a further deterioration in the following semester. The same research indicates that 215,000 small enterprises (25.9 per cent) were likely to close down with a total loss of 320,000 jobs. According to another report published by the Institute of Commerce and Services (INEMY) in September 2011, 25 per cent of all registered commercial enterprises had ceased their activities by August 2011, as compared to 15 per cent in the summer of 2010.

The Committee expresses its deep concern about the marked intensification of infringements of the labour legislation concerning the regular payment of wages and urges the Government to continue to take active steps in order to prevent the spread of problems of non-payment or delayed payment of wages, such as the reinforcement of controls, the strengthening of sanctions, or the use of appropriate incentives. In this connection, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the effectiveness of the system of enforcement and compliance following the labour inspectorate reform of 2009.

Furthermore, the Committee recalls that in its previous observation it had also raised the question of considerable wage cuts in the public sector decided as part of the austerity measures to reduce public deficit and had asked the Government to give a detailed account on any new anti-crisis measures affecting wages, including on the necessary consultations with the employers' and workers' organizations concerned. While noting that the Government's report does not contain any new information on this point, the Committee understands that additional fiscal measures have been adopted in November 2012 under the Memorandum of Understanding on the Medium-Term Fiscal Strategy 2013–16 (Memorandum III), including further cuts of up to 35 per cent in the monthly wages of employees under special wage regimes such as judges, diplomats, doctors, professors, members of the armed forces and police, and airport personnel and the elimination of seasonal bonuses of employees of the state and local governments. The new measures are part of fresh budget cuts deemed necessary to ensure the country receives its next bailout instalment from its international creditors.

The Committee understands that the successive rounds of harsh austerity measures are decided under the overall guidance of the European Commission, the European Central Bank (ECB) and the International Monetary Fund (IMF) which have been advising the Government since May 2010 on planning a broad range of reforms for raising the competitiveness of the national economy and the modernization of the public administration. It also understands that most of these measures are meant to reduce an alarmingly high public deficit. The Committee remains seriously concerned, however, about the cumulative effect these measures have on workers' income level and living standards and compliance with labour standards related to wage protection. As the Committee has already indicated in its previous observation, wage reductions as such are not dealt with in any of the provisions of Convention No. 95. However, when by their nature and scale wage reductions have dramatic effects on large parts of the workforce to the point of rendering practically meaningless the application of most of the provisions of the Convention, the Committee feels obliged to address the situation through the lens of "wage protection" in a broader sense.

In a related development, the national minimum wage was recently reduced by 22 per cent and even by 32 per cent for workers below the age of 25. Available statistics suggest that the continued downward pressure on wages may result in one fourth of the population falling below the poverty line. According to the 2012 annual report on the Greek economy and employment, published by the Labour Institute of the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) in August 2012, the purchasing power of the average wage has shrunk to 2003 levels and that of the minimum wage has slumped to the level of the second half of the 1970s. In the light of such developments, the Greek National Commission for Human Rights, in its capacity as an advisory body to the Government in matters of human rights protection, has issued a recommendation in December 2011 expressing its deep concern at, among others, the ongoing drastic reductions in even the lower salaries and pensions.

Under the circumstances, while acknowledging the crucial challenges faced by the country, the Committee recalls the Government's responsibility to strengthen – and not to undermine – labour standards related to wage protection, especially at times of crisis when social justice and income security are dearly needed. As the European Committee of Social Rights has concluded in a recent case (complaint No. 65/2011 filed by the General Federation of the National Electric Power Corporation and the Confederation of Greek Civil Servants' Trade Unions, Decision of 23 May 2012), "the economic crisis should not have as a consequence the reduction of the protection of the rights recognized by the [European Social] Charter" and "while it may be reasonable for the crisis to prompt changes in current legislation and practices in order to restrict certain items of public spending or relieve constraints on businesses, these changes should not excessively destabilize the situation of those who enjoy the rights enshrined in the Charter”.

The Committee also draws attention to the importance of open and continuous dialogue with the social partners. As the Committee noted in paragraph 374 of its 2003 General Survey on protection of wages, social dialogue is the only way of sharing the burden of economic reforms while preserving social peace and negotiated solutions have a much better chance of succeeding in a context where social consensus is the only solid basis for the continuation of painful structural changes. The Committee wishes to refer, in this connection, to the conclusions of the Committee on Freedom of Association, approved by the Governing Body in November 2012, following a complaint filed by several trade union confederations against the Government of Greece (Case No. 2820), according to which the Government should promote permanent and intensive social dialogue as it would be essential to the efforts for social peace in the country that consultations take place with the employers’ and workers’ organizations concerned, as a matter of urgency, to review any austerity measures with a view to discussing their impact and to agreeing on adequate safeguards for the protection of workers’ living standards (365th Report of the Committee on Freedom of Association, paragraphs 989–990). The Committee accordingly urges the Government to fully consult the representative organizations of employers and workers before the adoption of any new austerity measures and to make every possible effort to avoid any new curtailment of workers’ rights in respect of wage protection in either the public or the private sector and to seek to restore the purchasing power of the wages that has been drastically diminished. The Committee requests the Government to provide a comprehensive report on all wages-related measures adopted in the last three years, the scope of any tripartite consultations held prior to their adoption, and their social impact.

Guatemala

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1952)

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Scope – Definition of wages – Method of payment. The Committee notes the observations made by the Indigenous and Rural Workers Trade Union Movement of Guatemala (MSICG) in a communication of 31 August 2012 on the application of the Convention. In its observations, the MSICG alleges widespread hiring practices that consist, among other things, of disguising an employment relationship as a commercial relationship, under which workers are required to submit invoices so that their remuneration can be treated as a professional fee and not as a wage. According to the MSICG, the safeguards provided in labour law do not apply to commercial relationships. Furthermore, the filing of a wage claim or other complaint can lead to immediate termination of the relationship, and judicial proceedings cannot ensure the protection of workers’ rights in such circumstances.

Referring to the application of the statutory safeguards concerning wage attachment, the MSICG points out the consequences of wages being paid not in cash or by bank cheque or the equivalent, but by bank transfer. Since these bank deposits are not recorded as wage payments, the total amount of the wage may be attached unless the worker proves to the court that the deposits in his/her account correspond to wage payments. Furthermore, according to the MSICG, in most cases, the worker receives neither a statement showing the date of the deposit nor a payslip showing the wage and any deductions, and the General Labour Inspectorate does not check that these documents are sent to the workers. In its observations, the MSICG also asserts that the Government is devising practices whereby the amounts made over to workers in exchange for their labour need not be recorded as wages, which has implications for the calculation of other benefits based on the wage, such as social security benefits and compensation. Lastly, the MSICG asserts that the Government has taken no measures to bring the legislation into line with the Convention on the points the Committee raised in its previous direct request concerning, in particular, the payment of wages in the form of promissory notes or vouchers, and the partial payment of wages in kind. The Committee requests the Government to provide any comments it may wish to make in response to the MSICG’s observations.

Guinea

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1959)

Article 1 of the Convention. Introduction of a minimum wage. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest the draft new Labour Code, section 241.7 of which provides for the fixing by decree, after an opinion from the Labour and Social Legislation Advisory Committee (a tripartite body comprising, under the terms of section 515.3 of the draft Code, eight representatives of the employers and eight representatives of the workers from the private and the semi-private sectors), of a guaranteed inter-occupational minimum wage (SMIG). It notes that negotiations are currently in progress with a view to determining the amount of the SMIG and understands that the adoption of a decree to this end is one of the priorities for the trade union movement of Guinea. The Committee hopes that the negotiations in progress will soon be concluded and that the Government will take into account, when fixing the rate of the SMIG, the need to ensure a decent standard of living for workers and the economic situation of the country, and that the amount of the minimum wage will be adjusted regularly in accordance with changes in indicators such as the rate of inflation.

Finally, in order to ensure the effectiveness of the regulations to be adopted on the SMIG, the Committee would emphasize the importance of measures intended to publicize the amount of the minimum wage in force and monitor the application of these regulations in practice, particularly through the activities of the labour inspectorate. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any progress made in the process of adoption of the decree fixing the amount of the SMIG, sending a copy of the prior opinion issued by the Labour and Social Legislation Advisory Committee once it is available, and send all available information on the measures which will be implemented to ensure the effective application of this decree.

The Committee further notes the documents attached to the Government's report containing the collective agreement and the wage scale for the construction, public works and civil engineering sectors, and also the wage scale negotiated for the Novotel/GHI company. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on national or sectoral collective agreements fixing minimum wage rates.

Finally, the Committee wishes to take this opportunity to remind the Government that, on the basis of the recommendations of the Working Party on Policy regarding the Revision of Standards, the ILO Governing Body considered that Convention No. 26 was one of the instruments which were no longer up to date, even though they were still relevant in certain respects (GB.283/LILS/WP/PRS/1/2, paragraphs 19 and 40). The Committee therefore suggests that the Government contemplate the possibility of ratifying the Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131), which represents a degree of progress in comparison with Convention No. 26, for example, by providing for a wider scope, the setting up of a general minimum wage system and the adoption of certain criteria for determining minimum wage levels. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decision taken in this regard.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes that the Government's last report contained no reply to its previous comments, but essentially reproduced information already submitted in earlier reports which the Committee had considered to be strictly irrelevant to the scope and content of the Convention. The Committee is once again led to conclude that for the last 40 years there has been practically no progress in implementing the provisions of the Convention in either law or practice. The Committee expresses its deep disappointment about the Government's continued failure to apply the Convention despite the technical assistance provided by the Office in 1981 and the numerous commitments made by the Government ever since as regards the drafting and adoption of specific regulations or legislation concerning public contracts. Under the circumstances, the Committee hopes that the Government will make a sincere effort to maintain a meaningful dialogue with the ILO supervisory bodies and once more urges the Government to take all necessary measures without further delay in order to bring its national law and practice into conformity with the clear terms and objectives of the Convention.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Establishment of minimum wage fixing machinery. The Committee notes the Government's indications that the national legislation does not regulate the agricultural sector. In this respect, the Committee however observes that, in accordance with section 1, the Labour Code of 1988 is applicable to workers and employers exercising their professional activity throughout the Republic of Guinea, and that agricultural workers are not therefore excluded. It also notes with interest the draft new Labour Code, the scope of application of which is extended to persons engaged in an economic activity outside an employment relationship, and section 241.7 of which provides for the fixing by decree, following an opinion by the Advisory Commission on Labour and Social Legislation, of a minimum guaranteed inter-occupational wage (SMIG). The Committee notes that negotiations are currently being held with a view to determining the amount of the SMIG. It hopes that the SMIG will be applicable to agricultural workers or, if not, that tripartite negotiations will soon lead to the fixing of a guaranteed minimum agricultural wage (SMAG) so that the many agricultural workers in the country are not deprived of all protection in relation to minimum remuneration, which is one of the fundamental aspects of decent work. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to ensure the adoption of minimum wage fixing machinery for the agricultural sector.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication that Convention No. 99 is not on the list of up-to-date Conventions. In this respect, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that, on the basis of the recommendations of the Working Party regarding Policy on the Revision of Standards, the ILO Governing Body included Convention No. 99, among the instruments that are not completely up to date, but remain pertinent in certain respects (GB.283/LILS/WP/PRS/1/2, paragraphs 19 and 40). The most recent instrument in this field is the Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131), which contains certain improvements in relation to Convention No. 99, including a broader scope of application, the need for a complete system of minimum wages and the enumeration of criteria for determining the level of minimum wages. The Committee therefore invites the Government to examine the possibility of ratifying Convention No. 131 and requests it to keep the Office informed of any decision that may be taken in that respect.

Islamic Republic of Iran

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1972)

Article 12 of the Convention. Payment of wages at regular intervals – The wage arrears situation. The Committee has been commenting for the last ten years on widespread problems of accumulated wage arrears, especially in the Iranian textile industry, and has been drawing the Government's attention to the need for sustained action to effectively put an end to such practices. The situation of unpaid wages has been examined on two occasions by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, in June 2005 and in June 2007, while the Office has undertaken two technical assistance missions on the same issue in April 2006 and in October 2007. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that the description of the overall situation of wage arrears remained unclear as the Government had not provided precise information on the level of wage arrears by region and sector of economic activity or on the implementation of measures aimed at resolving the persistent problems of unpaid wages.

In its latest report, the Government once more outlines the reasons – structural, financial and political – that led industrial sectors such as textile and steel mill plants to decline, characterized by heavy financial losses, reduced exports, low competitiveness and liquidity problems. The Government also highlights policies and initiatives for the modernization of enterprises, the improvement of the business environment and the promotion of employment as a means of redressing the national economy and thus eventually resolving the problem of wage arrears. For instance, the Government refers to the establishment of the High Centre for the Modernization of Mine and Industry, which provided in 2012 US$1 billion in grants for the renovation of industries, or the Special Joint Committee composed of senior officers of several ministries, which receives requests for assistance from troubled enterprises and releases funds as appropriate. However, the Government's report provides very limited information concerning the evolving wage arrears situation in terms, for instance, of the overall amount of accumulated wage arrears, the type of sectors and number of enterprises affected, or the average of the delay in the payment of wages. Among the limited statistical information provided by the Government, the Committee notes that in the period 2010–11, a total amount of 18.3 billion Iranian Rial (IRR) (approximately US$1.5 million) were paid to 4,182 workers in the form of financial support following claims filed with the dispute settlement boards. Regarding the monitoring of the wage debt, the Government indicates that in the period 2011–12, the labour inspection services carried out 404,504 inspection visits and found 6,620 establishments experiencing problems of delayed payment of wages. The Government also indicates that non-payment or delayed payment of wages represents 5.8 per cent of all workers' complaints in workplaces.

The Committee is mindful of the adverse economic and political context in which the Government is seeking to address the structural deficiencies of the national economy and strengthen the productivity and sustainability of enterprises. While it is obvious that the problem of wage arrears is directly linked to the general situation of the national economy, the Committee considers that economic and financial difficulties cannot absolve the Government of its responsibility to ensure the timely and full payment of the wages due to workers for work already performed or services already rendered, in accordance with the requirements of Article 12 of the Convention. As the Committee has pointed out on numerous occasions, devising an effective response to such a complex problem presupposes a proper assessment of the problem in its true dimensions, which, in turn, is only possible through the systematic collection of up-to-date and reliable statistical information. Noting with concern that the situation of wage arrears continues to be not systematically monitored, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to take all appropriate measures to improve data collection so that the situation can be kept under close supervision and constant assessment. While fully conscious that the global economic downturn and the surrounding political tensions minimize the chances for short-term solutions to problems of that nature, the Committee hopes that the Government will intensify its efforts and exhaust all available means, including the use of sufficiently dissuasive sanctions, to progressively eliminate and prevent the recurrence of similar practices in the future.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2014.]

Jamaica

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes the adoption of the Standards Bidding Documents – Procurement of Works (Selective Tendering) in April 2010 as well as the adoption of the four-volume Revised Handbook of Public Sector Procurement Procedures (RHPP) in October 2010. However, the Committee notes with regret that these voluminous and detailed texts contain no reference whatsoever to the working conditions of workers employed under public contracts nor do they provide for labour clauses of the type prescribed by the Convention. Despite the specific guidance given by the Committee in its previous comments, the Government has not taken any steps to effectively implement the Convention either through the RHPP, which were being elaborated since 2008, or through the Procurement Regulations prepared under the Contactor General Act. The Committee is therefore obliged to conclude that at present the Convention is not given effect in either law or practice.

The Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention once again to the basic purpose of the Convention which is to ensure that the workers employed for the execution of public contracts enjoy wages and other working conditions at least as satisfactory as those normally established for the type of work concerned, whether they are established by collective agreement or otherwise, in the locality where the work is done. The Convention requires that this be done through the insertion of appropriate labour clauses in public contracts. This has the effect of setting as minimum conditions for the contract standards that are already established within the locality. The further aim is that local standards higher than those of general application (this in practice means the most advantageous labour conditions) should be applied, where they exist. In fact, the type of labour clauses prescribed by this Article of the Convention seek to oblige the contractor to apply the most advantageous pay rates, including overtime pay, and other working conditions, such as work hour limits and holiday entitlement, established in the industrial sector and geographical region in question. Recalling that the inclusion of appropriate labour clauses in all public contracts covered by the Convention does not necessarily require the enactment of new legislation but can be also realized by administrative instructions or circulars, the Committee hopes that the Government will take all necessary measures without further delay in order to bring the national legislation into conformity with the provisions of the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

Japan

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1971)

Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention. Minimum wage system. The Committee notes the comments of the National Confederation of Trade Unions (ZENROREN), dated 25 September 2011, and the Government's reply concerning the application of the Convention. According to ZENRONEN, the implementation of the minimum wage legislation raises four issues: (i) low level of minimum wage rates; (ii) unfair method of calculation of the minimum wage; (iii) widening gaps among prefectural minimum wage rates; and (iv) discrimination against ZENROREN representatives in minimum wage councils.

Regarding the first point, ZENROREN considers that, contrary to the requirements of Article 3 of the Convention and section 9 of the Minimum Wages Act, both of which require that the cost of living be taken into account when setting minimum wage rates, the current rates are fixed at levels insufficient to cover the needs of a worker, and even less so the needs of his or her family. What is more, minimum pay rates are often below the amount paid under the social aid programme (or livelihood assistance). For instance, while the minimum monthly wage is fixed at ¥111,183 in Tokyo and ¥85,679 in Kochi, the amounts paid under the social aid programme are ¥141,680 in Tokyo and ¥112,056 in Kochi respectively.

In its reply, the Government indicates that, in fact, minimum pay rates in nine prefectures were found to be below the social aid allowance but measures were taken to raise the minimum wage in six of them while efforts are now being made for the readjustment of the minimum wage in the remaining three prefectures.

With respect to the second point, ZENROREN maintains that the Government uses various methods to misrepresent minimum wage levels as compared to social aid standards. For instance, the Government uses the figure of 178.8 as being the average number of hours of work per month, which is unduly long and clearly exceeds average working hours, including overtime, of full-time workers in all industries.

In its reply, the Government states that the current method of comparing minimum wage levels and social aid benefits as well as the reference number of monthly working hours, have been adopted through sincere discussions by the Central Minimum Wages Council which brings together persons representing the general interest and workers' and employers' representatives.

As regards the third point raised in ZENROREN's comments, it is alleged that the gaps among the minimum wage rates applicable in different prefectures have been widening since the revision of the Minimum Wages Act in 2007, which introduced the consideration of cost of living and general wage level by prefecture. For instance, the minimum pay rate applicable in Tokyo is 23 per cent higher than that of Okinawa. ZENROREN also indicates that it has conducted a survey showing that the cost of living was practically the same in the prefectures of Saitama, Iwate, Shizuoka and Nagasaki, and there was therefore no reason for establishing different minimum pay rates. Moreover, ZENROREN claims that regional minimum wage gaps have a serious impact on employment in rural areas as young workers increasingly migrate to big cities in the search of higher pay. ZENROREN considers that there is no justification for a relatively small country to have 47 different minimum wages and therefore calls for the adoption of a single, generally applicable minimum wage rate.

In its reply, the Government indicates that regional differences exist in the cost of living and the ability of enterprises to pay wages, and therefore it is only natural to determine wage rates according to the actual conditions of the respective regions. The Government adds that the role of the Central Minimum Wages Council is to set a rough estimate of the revised minimum wage rate in order to facilitate discussions and maintain consistency at the prefectural level.

Finally, ZENROREN alleges that it has been systematically excluded from the composition of the central and 47 prefectural minimum wage councils. It indicates that contrary to the appointment of employers' representatives where members are selected from three main employers' associations, on the workers' side, only members supported by the Japan Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO) and its affiliates have been appointed so far.

In its reply, the Government merely indicates that workers' representatives are appointed in accordance with the procedures set out in section 23 of the Minimum Wages Act and section 3 of the Minimum Wages Councils Order.

While noting the Government's explanations, the Committee would appreciate receiving additional information with regard to: (i) measures taken or envisaged aimed to ensure that minimum pay rates are higher than the amount of the livelihood assistance; (ii) any official report or research study addressing in greater detail the advantages and disadvantages of maintaining a system of separate minimum wage rates by prefecture; and (iii) any consideration given to the possibility of appointing workers' members to minimum wages councils from different trade union confederations in the interest of amplifying the representativeness of the councils.

In addition, the Committee raises other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Republic of Korea

Article 4(3)(b) of the Convention. Appointment of independent members of a minimum wage fixing body. The Committee notes the comments of the Federation of Korean Trade Unions (FKTU) and the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU) dated 12 June 2012, and the Government's reply dated 26 September 2012 concerning the application of the Convention.

According to the allegations of the FKTU and KCTU, the Government's decision to appoint nine public interest members of the 9th Minimum Wage Council (MWC) unilaterally, without any consultations with labour and management organizations, violates the Convention, which calls for the appointment of independent persons after full consultation with representative organizations of employers and workers concerned, where such organizations exist and such consultation is in accordance with national law or practice.

The two workers' organizations also indicate that although the Minimum Wage Act does not specify the procedure for recommending the public interest members of the Council, efforts were made up until 2008 to appoint the public interest members in a manner similar to that followed for the appointment of public interest members to the Economic and Social Development Commission (ESDC). According to the Act on Establishment and Operation of the ESDC, public interest members are appointed by the President following the recommendations of workers' and employers' organizations.

According to the FKTU and KCTU, the qualifications of the nine public interest members are crucial for minimum wage negotiations since they represent the neutral group between the labour and management sides, especially since recent wage negotiations have proven difficult. They also indicate that measures should be taken to diversify the profile of the nine public interest members since at present they are all professors from the same university. Finally, the FKTU and KCTU maintain that the MWC as a social agreement body independent of the Government should be composed and operated in a democratic way, and to this end, new draft legislation for the revision of the Minimum Wage Act has been submitted to the National Assembly.

In its reply, the Government draws attention to the provision of Article 4(3)(b) of the Convention, which requires consultations only to the extent that such consultations are prescribed by national law or established in practice. In this connection, it refers to the negotiating history of this provision which shows that an unqualified consultation requirement was a major concern for many countries and therefore the reference to national law or practice was introduced to provide flexibility. In the Government's view, therefore, Article 4(3)(b) of the Convention cannot be construed as meaning that a member State is obliged to undertake full consultations with labour and management before appointing independent representatives, if such consultation is not specified by national law or does not exist in national practice. The Government accordingly states that consulting workers' and employers' organizations prior to the appointment of the public interest members of the MWC is not provided for in the Minimum Wage Act and it has never been part of national practice, and therefore the allegations of the FKTU and KCTU are grounded on an incorrect interpretation of Article 4(3)(b) of the Convention.

In addition, the Government describes the process of minimum wage negotiations within the MWC, and the role of public interest members as mediators seeking a compromise between the workers' and employers' proposals, which underscores the importance of professionalism and independence on their part. In the Government's opinion, if workers' and employers' organizations had a right to recommend public interest members, the independence and impartiality of those members would be seriously undermined.

Finally, with regard to the proposed revision of the Minimum Wage Act according to which labour, management and the administration would select three public interest members each, the Government considers that this would be tantamount to having 12 workers' members, 12 employers' members and three public interest members of the Council thus tilting the balance of its tripartite composition.

The Committee takes due note of the comments of the FKTU and KCTU and of the Government's response. The Committee observes that the Convention requires full consultations with representative employers' and workers' organizations prior to the appointment of independent experts to a minimum wage fixing body only where such consultations are either expressly provided for in national laws or regulations or clearly established in practice. This conclusion is also reflected in paragraph 222 of the 1992 General Survey on minimum wages while the same view was expressed in an informal opinion given by the Office in 1980 at the request of a country.

In addition, the Committee considers that under this Article of the Convention, specific competence and impartiality are key qualifications of the members representing the general interest of the country – a point that is also found in Paragraph 9 of the Minimum Wage Fixing Recommendation, 1970 (No. 135), which refers to “suitably qualified” and “independent” persons. Therefore, based on the Government's explanations that consultations prior to the appointment of the public interest members are neither provided for in the minimum wage legislation nor established in practice, the Committee is of the view that the selection process and working method of the Minimum Wage Council are consistent with the requirements of Article 4(3)(b) of the Convention.

However, the Committee feels obliged to recall the fundamental importance of genuine and effective consultations with the social partners for the smooth operation of the minimum wage fixing process. The Committee trusts that in the interest of promoting constructive social dialogue, the Government and the social partners will engage in open and good faith discussions with a view to examining possible adjustments or improvements to the existing system of minimum wage negotiations in order to enhance efficiency, prevent conflict and build confidence.

In addition, the Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Libya

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee recalls its previous observations concerning the recurrent incidents surrounding the massive expulsion of foreign undocumented workers and the alleged non-payment of wages owed to those workers. The Committee notes the Government's report as well as the report of the technical assistance mission to the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya undertaken by the Office in July 2007. The five-day mission was scheduled as a follow-up to the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2006. The purpose of the technical assistance mission was principally to assess the current situation with respect to the treatment of irregular foreign workers in the light of the requirements of Conventions Nos 95 and 111, and to obtain information on any concrete measures the Government might have taken in this regard. The mission was also to address broader issues concerning the application of ratified Conventions in the light of the Committee's pending comments and to evaluate the need for technical assistance in order to formulate initial proposals for targeted initiatives.

Having duly examined the Office report, the Committee is satisfied that a series of open and constructive discussions with government officials, public institutions and employers' and workers' organizations – characterized by a high level of cooperation on the part of the Libyan authorities – permitted the clarification of a number of issues and a direct dialogue on certain recent legislative developments affecting the application of Convention No. 95. The Committee notes, in particular, the adoption of a ministerial decision for the regularization of foreign workers and the contractual arrangements put in place to prevent the recurrence of past incidents as well as the establishment of a multi-ministerial committee with the participation of the workers' organization to resolve any claims illegal immigrants might have before deportation orders can be issued.

More concretely, the Committee notes that according to Decision No. 20/2007 of the General People's Committee for Manpower, Training and Employment on some provisions concerning the organization, import and employment of foreign labour, anyone wishing to enter the country for work would hereafter be obliged to conclude an employment contract in advance and have that contract endorsed by the Libyan authorities in the country of origin whilst all foreign workers currently present in the country would have until 31 July 2007 to regularize their situation by undergoing a medical examination and obtaining a valid employment contract. Moreover, by Decision No. 56/2006 of the Council of Ministers, a multi-stakeholder committee – composed of members of the security forces, immigration services, consular services, the Ministries of Manpower and Foreign Affairs and also workers' representatives – was set up with a view to examining any claims irregular foreign workers might have before being expelled from the country. According to the new arrangement, undocumented foreign workers who have wage-related claims could not be expelled until such claims are reviewed and they sign a document certifying that all outstanding payments have been settled. The Committee welcomes these developments and will be interested to learn of their effectiveness in preventing the recurrence of events such as those which occurred in three distinct periods in the past. It recalls, in this connection, that Convention No. 95 covers regular and irregular workers alike in so far as the payment of wages on time and in full is concerned, and therefore matters such as immigration policy or administrative measures against clandestine workers should not impact on its application. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide detailed information, including all available statistics, on the practical implementation of the new measures concerning the regularization of foreign workers and the setting up of the standing committee to review claims of irregular workers facing expulsion.

In addition, the Committee notes that according to the information provided by the Government in its last report, the total number of workers from neighbouring countries who have been deported so far is 9,424 while the amount of US$1.88 million has been paid to them in the form of pocket money before their departure. As it is not clear to which period the above statistical information refers, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide additional explanations in this respect.

As regards the application of Articles 2, 4, 7 and 8 of the Convention, the Committee notes the explanations given by the Government to the technical assistance mission concerning the provisions of existing legislation and the commitment to amend the relevant provisions of the Labour Code concerning the coverage of agricultural workers and the setting of an overall limit to the permissible amount of payment in kind. In this respect, the Committee understands that a copy of the draft Labour Relations Act in its current reading has been submitted to the Office for technical comments. It also understands that the new draft legislation, which is now before the General People's Congress for review, is a consolidated text composed of three parts, one on the employment relationship and labour conditions, one on the public service, and one on industrial relations. The Committee asks the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments regarding the finalization and adoption of the new Labour Relations Act, in particular, any legislative changes following up on the recommendations of the ILO technical assistance mission.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention. Review and adjustment of the minimum wage. The Committee has been raising questions in recent years concerning the operation of the minimum wage fixing machinery, the periodicity of adjustment of the minimum wage and the criteria used for such adjustment. Following the establishment of the Wages Board in 2006 and the Decision of the General People's Committee in 2007 to set the national minimum wage at 250 dinars (approximately US$208) per month, the Committee has requested the Government to provide more detailed information on the operation of the Wages Board, the eventual revision of the national minimum wage as well as the enforcement of the minimum wage legislation in practice. In its last report, the Government makes renewed reference to the ILO technical assistance mission that visited the country in July 2007 and emphasizes its willingness to improve conditions of workers in order to achieve full employment and social welfare. The Committee trusts that the Government will provide in its next report full particulars on the effect given to the requirements of Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention, especially the manner in which the basic needs of workers and their families are taken into account in fixing the minimum wage level, including any surveys or studies of national economic conditions. Moreover, recalling that under Decision No. 613/2006 of the Secretary of the General People's Committee for Manpower, Training and Employment, the Wages Board holds regular meetings once every three months and may initiate the procedure for the revision of the minimum wage whenever it considers it necessary, the Committee asks the Government to provide all available information on the Board's most recent meetings and any decision taken or envisaged concerning the review of the minimum wage rate currently in force. Finally, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide in its next report up to date information on measures to ensure compliance with the national minimum wage or any difficulties experienced in this respect, in particular, the number of labour inspection visits carried out and violations reported, with special reference to migrant workers who constitute half of the total workforce.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Morocco

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1956)

Article 2 of the Convention. Inclusion of labour clauses in public contracts. For several years the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that Moroccan legislation lays down no requirement to include labour clauses – as prescribed by the Convention – in public contracts. In its latest report the Government refers to section 12 of the general administrative clauses for public contracts (CCAG-T), approved by Decree No. 2-99-1087 of 4 May 2000, which stipulates that in the conclusion of public contracts, performance bonds are established in an amount determined in the specifications to be produced by each bidder. The Government states that the purpose of requiring such a bond is to ensure that bidders fulfil their commitments, otherwise the contracting authority shall make a deduction from the bond to compensate workers adversely affected, in accordance with section 20(5) of the CCAG-T. The Government again refers to section 20 of the CCAG-T, which sets out the formalities and prescriptions applying to the hiring of workers and under which the contractor must show that the wages paid to the workers are not lower than the statutory minimum wage. The Government also refers to section 25 of Decree No. 2-98-482 of 30 December 1998 laying down the conditions and forms of government procurement contracts, and to provisions requiring bidders to be members of the National Social Security Fund, to which they must submit regular statements of wages.

The Committee notes, in this connection, that the abovementioned provisions of two decrees mentioned above are not sufficient to ensure application of the Convention, since they merely remind bidders that they are required to comply with the labour legislation. They are in fact pre-qualification criteria that contractors and suppliers must meet in order to comply with the prescriptions in force in Morocco. The Committee refers in this context to paragraphs 117 and 118 of its General Survey of 2008 on labour clauses in public contracts, in which it pointed out that the Convention does not relate to some general eligibility criteria or pre-qualification requirements of individuals or enterprises bidding for public contracts. Furthermore, certification offers some proof about tenderers' past performance and law-abiding conduct but carries no binding commitment with regard to prospective operations as labour clauses do.

What the Convention does require is that tenderers be informed in advance, through standard labour clauses in the tendering documents that, if they succeed in obtaining the contract, they will have to apply wages and other working conditions that are at least as favourable as the highest standards established for the same district by collective agreement, arbitration award or national laws or regulations. Noting therefore that the legislation on public contracts still falls short of the requirements of the Convention, the Committee again asks the Government to take the necessary steps without further delay to bring the national legislation into line with the Convention.

Myanmar

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing machinery. Following up on its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's statement that the country is in a transitional period and that existing labour laws are being amended while new ones are being adopted. The Government also states that in this context the Minimum Wages Act, 1949 is in the process of being reviewed to be brought fully in line with relevant international labour standards. The Committee understands that new draft minimum wage legislation is being prepared and it has been communicated to the Office for preliminary comments. The Committee is particularly encouraged by recent developments, namely the International Labour Conference decision of June 2012 to lift most of the limitations in ILO activities and technical assistance which had been applied since 1999, and the conclusions of the Officers of the Governing Body who visited the country in May 2012 and who observed the rapid transformation of Myanmar's relationship with the multilateral system. The Committee accordingly expresses the firm hope that in this climate of transition towards a more open and democratic society, the Government will seize the opportunity to introduce all necessary changes for the modernization of the minimum wage legislation and the establishment of a truly comprehensive system of minimum wages based on workers' needs and periodically reviewed after consultation with employers' and workers' representatives. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any progress made regarding the approval of the new Minimum Wages Act by the National Parliament (Pyidaungsu Hluttaw) and to transmit the text of the new legislation once it has been adopted.

Netherlands

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1952)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. For the last five years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that public procurement legislation does not contain any provisions giving effect to the specific requirements of the Convention. Over the same period, the Committee has been in receipt of a number of observations made by the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) raising the same point. The Committee recalls that in its report submitted in 2008 the Government had admitted that the Convention was not fully implemented and had indicated that it was examining means for improving compliance with the Convention. In its latest report, however, the Government states that the Convention is fully complied with through existing measures, namely the system of universally binding collective agreements and the minimum requirements of the labour legislation which would apply if no universally binding collective agreements apply. The Government also states that its system of universally binding collective agreements is fully consonant with recent jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice, in particular the Rüffert case (C-346/06), and concludes that there is no specific reason for further adjustments of the implementation of Convention No. 94. The Committee notes that in a communication dated 31 August 2012, the Confederation of Netherlands Industry and Employers (VNO-NCW) has expressed its full support for the Government's position in this matter.

In addition, the Committee notes the new observations of the FNV dated 30 August 2012 according to which the Government, although it has ratified Convention No. 94 a long time ago, has no intention whatsoever to fully comply with its requirements. The FNV points out that draft section 2.8 of the Public Procurement Bill, which is now before the Senate, essentially reproduces the purely permissive provision of section 26 of the Order of July 2005 implementing the EU Public Procurement Directive of 2004 and therefore does not ensure the observance of Article 2 of the Convention under which public contracts to which the Convention applies must include in all circumstances clauses ensuring to the workers concerned, wages, hours of work and other working conditions which are not less favourable than those established for work of the same nature in the same area by collective agreement, arbitration award or national laws or regulations. The FNV also reiterates earlier comments on the system of declaring collective agreements generally applicable under the Collective Labour Agreements Act and on the implications of the Rüffert case basically denouncing the Government's contradictory statements and attitude on this subject.

While noting the latest exchange of views, the Committee feels obliged to recall that the manner in which the Convention is purportedly implemented through Order of 16 July 2005 on procedures for the award of public works, supply and service contracts, has been thoroughly examined in the comment that was addressed to the Government in 2007. As the Committee explained in that comment, section 26 of the Order of 16 July 2005 provides that the contracting authority may attach particular social or environmental conditions to public contracts, whereas the Convention requires the inclusion of labour clauses of the type provided for in Article 2 in all circumstances. The Committee further explained that, apart from this core requirement, the Convention also calls for other measures, including appropriate publicity to be given to the terms of labour clauses, the posting of notices at the workplace and adequate sanctions for failure to observe the provisions of labour clauses, as well as effective measures to enable workers who have been underpaid to recover any sums due to them. The Committee is, therefore, of the view that, as it currently stands, the national public procurement legislation is not consistent with the specific requirements of the Convention and accordingly the Government should consider appropriate steps in order to bring national law and practice in line with its provisions. The Committee firmly hopes that in the ongoing process of elaboration of the Public Procurement Bill, the Government will seize the opportunity to introduce the necessary provisions to ensure full compliance with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any progress made in this regard and to transmit a copy of the new public procurement legislation once it has been adopted.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Lower minimum wages for young workers. The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it noted the comments made by the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) concerning the differentiated minimum wage levels for young workers below 23 years of age.

In its reply, the Government indicates that the lower minimum wage rates for young persons strike a balance between two objectives of government policy, namely ensuring that young persons remain in education as long as possible and do not drop out of school, and preserving and promoting employment for young persons who enter the labour market. With respect to the first objective, the Government is of the view that if the minimum wage were to be substantially higher this might encourage young persons to drop out of school and to try to find work, even though they do not yet have the necessary skills. As regards the second objective, the Government considers that an unduly high minimum wage for young workers might result in a loss of employment for this group, as wage costs would no longer match their productivity, and therefore demand for young workers would decline sharply.

While subscribing to the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value, the Government states that, as a matter of fact, young persons are generally less productive than adults and require more supervision. Therefore, a lower rate for young persons is not unreasonable nor is it inconsistent with the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value.

The Committee notes that the Confederation of Netherlands Industry and Employers (VNO-NCW) and the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) in a communication dated 31 August 2012 have expressed their full support for the Government's views in this matter.

Further, the Committee notes the new observations of the FNV dated 30 August 2012 according to which there is no justification for the age discrimination in minimum wages. Recalling that one third of young people between 18 and 23 years old have an independent household, and also recalling that an 18-year old worker receives €658 while the full minimum wage is €1,446, the FNV finds the situation of young adults of 21–22 year-olds particularly distressing. With respect to the Government's policy to reduce school drop-outs, the FNV considers that even if young persons were tempted by a higher wage, they would still be obliged to return to school in order to get a starting qualification. In relation to the impact on employment of the possible abolition of the lower minimum wages for young adult workers, the FNV indicates that there is no research substantiating the Government's fear that youth unemployment will rise. Finally, the FNV considers that the notion that young persons are by definition less productive is outdated as young adults can be energetic and may master new skills.

While noting the different views, the Committee considers that affirming that young workers are less productive than adult workers is a generalization which may not hold true in many cases, especially for those young adult workers between 18 and 23 years of age, and which is not corroborated by objective evidence. The Committee also considers that in light of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value, remuneration levels should be determined on the basis of objective factors such as the quantity and quality of work performed, and not stereotypical assumptions linking low productivity with young age. The Committee accordingly requests the Government to consider the possibility of engaging broad consultations with all interested stakeholders regarding the advisability of maintaining differentiated minimum wage rates, especially for young adult workers below 23 years of age, in the light of the overriding principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value.

Norway

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1996)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee refers to its previous comments, in which it noted with interest the adoption of Regulation No. 112/2008 of 8 February 2008 regarding wages and working conditions in public contracts, which gives effect to the Convention. It notes that the Surveillance Authority of the European Free Trade Association (EFTA) sent to the Norwegian Government, on 29 June 2011, a reasoned opinion in which it referred to the Rüffert decision delivered by the European Court of Justice (ECJ) on 3 April 2008. On the basis of this case law, the EFTA Surveillance Authority alleged that, by maintaining Regulation No. 112/2008 in force, Norway was in breach of the Agreement on the European Economic Area (EEA) and Directive No. 96/71/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 December 1996 concerning the posting of workers in the framework of the provision of services, this directive being applicable to Norway as a State party to the EEA. The Committee notes that, in the reply that it sent to the EFTA Surveillance Authority on 15 November 2011, the Government emphasized the importance of Regulation No. 112/2008 in its plan to combat social dumping and recalled that this instrument gives effect to Convention No. 94. Nevertheless, in order to guarantee better compliance with EEA law, the Government introduced a number of amendments to the Regulation, which came into force on 15 November 2011. The Regulation, as amended, in essence provides that the minimum wage rates which must be respected are those resulting from collective agreements concluded at the national level. For the sectors covered by regulations extending the application of collective agreements, Regulation No. 112/2008 henceforth refers to the wages and working conditions derived from these regulations. There is no longer any reference to wages and working conditions prevailing in the region and the occupation concerned. The amended Regulation also specifies which types of wages and working conditions are to be applied, namely minimum rates of pay, working time and compensation for travel, board and lodging. Furthermore, the contracting authorities have to make it clear in the call for tenders and in the contract documents that these conditions are to be complied with. Finally, the Committee notes the report prepared by the company KPMG on social dumping in public contracts awarded by municipalities, a copy of which was attached to the Government's report and which examines in particular Regulation No. 112/2008 and the procedure initiated by the EFTA Surveillance Authority against Norway, and which explicitly refers to the Convention.

The Committee also notes the comments made respectively by the Norwegian Confederation of Trade Unions (LO) and the Confederation of Norwegian Business and Industry (NHO), supported by the Enterprise Federation of Norway (VIRKE), which were attached to the Government's report. The LO considers that the Government's report on the application of the Convention is satisfactory. The NHO, however, considers that the amended Regulation does not apply to the private sector, as noted by the EFTA Surveillance Authority, and that it is therefore still not in compliance with the EEA Agreement. The NHO adds that including information on the contract clauses in the call for tenders and other documents is not sufficient, as the contracting authorities must also specify which collective agreement and which specific parts of the agreement shall apply.

The Committee notes the efforts made by the Government to continue to implement the Convention, despite the procedure initiated against it by the EFTA Surveillance Authority. While noting that it is not its role to comment on decisions of the ECJ on the compatibility of national legislation with Community law, the Committee recalls that the Rüffert decision, to which the EFTA Surveillance Authority referred in its reasoned opinion, concerned Germany, which has not ratified Convention No. 94. The situation of Norway is therefore different in legal terms as it is bound by the Convention.

The Committee understands that, in November 2011, the Office contacted the EFTA Surveillance Authority expressing its willingness to engage in discussions on the issues raised in the reasoned opinion relating to Norway's commitments deriving from the ratification of the Convention, but that the EFTA Surveillance Authority has not up to now taken up this opportunity. The Committee also notes that, in its resolution of 25 October 2011 on modernization of European Union public procurement policy, the European Parliament called for an explicit statement in the directives on public procurement that they do not prevent any country from complying with ILO Convention No. 94, and it called on the European Commission to encourage all European Union Member States to comply with the Convention. Moreover, the Committee notes with interest the terms of Regulation No. 112/2008, as amended, which aims to improve the information provided to applicants for tenders and co-contractors on the labour clauses which have to be complied with when executing public contracts. With regard to the terms of the labour clauses, however, the Committee recalls that the collective agreements referred to in Article 2(1) of the Convention are those concluded between organizations of employers and workers representative respectively of substantial proportions of the employers and workers in the trade or industry concerned, and not only collective agreements declared to be of general application. In light of the above considerations, the Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any new developments in the procedure initiated by the EFTA Surveillance Authority against Norway and to provide information on the manner in which Regulation No. 112/2008, as amended, gives effect to the Convention, particularly concerning compliance with the wage rates and other working conditions set out in the collective agreements which have not been declared of general application.

Panama

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1971)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Inclusion of labour clauses in public contracts. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government's report merely repeats information that was sent previously and does not refer to any progress made with regard to bringing the national legislation into line with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee previously noted the reference made by the Government to two communications, No. DM.359.2008 of 5 May 2008 and No. DM.374.2008 of 7 May 2008, sent by the Ministry of Work and Labour Development (MITRADEL) to the Ministry of Economic and Financial Affairs (MEF) and the Directorate-General of Public Procurement, respectively. Noting that the situation remains unchanged, the Committee reiterates that clauses in public contracts which merely recall the applicability and binding nature of national labour legislation, in particular with regard to wages, working hours and other conditions of work, do not comply with the provisions of the Convention.

Moreover, the Committee understands that the Directorate-General of Public Procurement, with the assistance of the World Bank, has developed a strategic plan to modernize the public procurement system and give it greater transparency and effectiveness. The plan comprises six tiers, including one concerned with ensuring the uniformity of tendering procedures and the preparation of standard documents. In this regard, the Committee considers that the Government might take this opportunity to adopt legislative provisions which would finally make it possible to bring the legislation into line with the provisions of the Convention. While reminding the Government that it can avail itself of technical assistance from the Office if it so desires, the Committee urges it to take the necessary steps to give effect to the provisions of the Convention and requests it to keep the Office informed of any developments, particularly in the legislative field.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Paraguay

Articles 2, 3, 4, 6, 7 and 12 of the Convention. Scope of application – Payment of wages in kind – Indigenous workers. The Committee has been drawing the Government's attention for several years to the need to extend the coverage of the provisions of the Labour Code regarding protection of wages to agricultural workers and also the need to consider the introduction of an express provision prohibiting the partial payment of wages in the form of liquor of high alcoholic content or noxious drugs. In addition, the Committee has been commenting on the situation of indigenous communities in the Chaco region and reported abusive pay practices which are linked to suspected debt bondage and forced labour situations. In its latest report, the Government essentially reproduces the information communicated in its 2009 report and provides no new information with respect to the Committee's comments with the exception of aggregate statistics concerning labour inspection visits carried out in 2011. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to take the necessary measures as a matter of priority in order to: (i) bring agricultural workers within the scope of application of the Convention, so as to enjoy with respect to their wages the protective coverage of the Labour Code; (ii) ensure that full effect is given to the requirements of Article 4(1) of the Convention regarding payment of wages in the form of alcohol or drugs; and (iii) properly investigate and effectively prevent and punish any pay practices in relation to indigenous workers in the Paraguayan Chaco region which would not comply with the following requirements of the Convention: Article 3 (payment of wages in legal tender only, and not in vouchers or coupons), Article 6 (prohibition to limit in any manner the freedom of workers to dispose of their wages), Article 7 (prohibition of any coercion exerted to workers in relation to the use of works stores), and Article 12 (payment of wages at regular intervals). Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its comments made under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), and the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169).

Philippines

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's reference to Order No. 18-A of 14 November 2011 of the Department of Labour and Employment concerning Rules implementing sections 106–109 of the Labour Code. The Government indicates that a service agreement concluded under this Order between a principal employer (who may be any person or entity, including government agencies and government-owned and controlled corporations), and a contractor (defined as any person or entity engaged in a legitimate contracting or subcontracting arrangement providing either services, skilled workers, temporary workers, or a combination of services to a principal employer), must include a clause ensuring compliance with all the rights and benefits of the employees under the Labour Code, such as provision of safe and healthful working conditions, leave, rest days, overtime pay, 13th month pay, separation pay and retirement benefits.

The Committee observes, however, that Department Order No. 18-A does not pertain specifically to public procurement operations but rather to contracting and subcontracting arrangements in general and also that section 8 of the Order merely reaffirms that workers engaged under a service agreement enjoy the full coverage of the Labour Code in terms of wages, working time and social security benefits. As the Committee has indicated on numerous occasions, the fact that the general labour legislation is applicable to workers engaged in the execution of public contracts does not in any way exempt the Government from providing for the inclusion in public contracts of the labour clauses envisaged by the Convention. Such inclusion ensures the protection of workers in cases in which the legislation only establishes minimum conditions of work (e.g. minimum pay rates) which may be exceeded by general or sectoral collective agreements. Moreover, even if collective agreements were applicable to workers engaged in the execution of public contracts, the implementation of the Convention remains of full value because its provisions are designed precisely to ensure the specific protection needed by those workers. For example, the Convention requires the adoption by the competent authorities of measures, such as the advertisement of specifications, to ensure that tenderers have advance knowledge of the terms of the labour clauses. It also requires notices to be posted in conspicuous places at the workplace to inform workers of the conditions of work applicable to them. Finally, it provides for sanctions in the event of non-compliance with the terms of labour clauses, such as the withholding of contracts or the withholding of payments due to contractors, which may be more directly effective than those applicable for violations of the general labour legislation.

The Committee understands that the Government is currently considering the possibility of receiving technical assistance from the Office in the framework of a time-bound programme aimed at capacity building on international labour standards and reporting obligations. The Committee hopes that the Government will seize this opportunity in order to formulate either legislative provisions or administrative instructions and circulars which would fully incorporate the provisions of the Convention into the domestic public procurement regulatory framework. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any progress made in this regard.

Article 12 of the Convention. Regular payment of wages – The wage arrears situation. The Committee notes the detailed statistics on inspection results for the period 2011–12. According to this data, in 2011, out of 68.5 thousand employers inspected, 16.8 thousand were found to have breached the legislation on the protection of wages with a total amount of unpaid wages and other benefits of 138.8 million Polish Zloty (PLN) (approximately €33.8 million) concerning 82.2 thousand employees, and representing an average unpaid amount of PLN1,689 (approximately €412) per employee. The Government's report further indicates that the wage arrears situation affects numerous employment sectors, such as manufacturing, construction, education, public administration, culture and entertainment. In addition, following 1,420 targeted inspections carried out in 2011 and focusing on wage issues, holiday pay and overtime were not paid by 38 per cent and 34 per cent of the inspected employers respectively. The Government states that the level of irregularities remains similar to that of 2010, with more than one third of inspected employers failing to pay wages to employees, and one out of four employers not paying wages on time. The Government also indicates that given the scale of the problem, it was decided to intensify inspections targeted on payroll records and to ensure that such inspections constitute 10 per cent of the total number of inspections.

The Committee notes with concern that the most recent statistics provided by the Government demonstrate that the difficulties concerning the regular payment of wages persist unabated, while in some cases the situation has even worsened. The Committee notes, for instance, a report from the National Labour Inspectorate (PIP) providing information on compliance by Polish employers with the law on the payment of wages, according to which almost 19 per cent more employers were in arrears with payments in the first half of 2010 than in the first half of 2009, and the total overdue payments increased by almost 62 per cent between the first half of 2009 and the same period in 2010. While noting the close monitoring of the situation by the inspection services and the reinforcement of controls, the Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts, including through the imposition of sufficiently dissuasive sanctions, in order to contain and progressively eliminate the widespread practices of non-payment or partial payment of wages which entail serious social consequences for thousands of workers and also important consequences for the national economy as a whole.

As regards the situation in the health sector, the Committee notes the statistical information on labour inspection results in that sector for the period 2010–11. According to 2010 data, overtime was not paid in 36 per cent of inspected facilities (public and private) and it was underpaid in 24 per cent of inspected facilities. Similarly, in 2011, irregularities relating to the payment of wages were found in 19 per cent of inspected medical establishments while overtime was not paid in 56 per cent of establishments with employees working overtime. Noting that health-care institutions continue to face considerable difficulties with wage debts, the Committee hopes that in the ongoing process of restructuring and reform of the health sector, the Government will give special attention to the settlement of all outstanding payments to health-care personnel and the elimination of the all too common pay irregularities observed in the sector.

In addition, the Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Portugal

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1983)

Articles 3 and 4(2) of the Convention. Elements to be taken into consideration in determining the level of minimum wages – Consultations with the social partners. The Committee notes the observations made by the General Confederation of Portuguese Workers (CGTP) and the General Workers' Union (UGT) concerning the application of the Convention, which were attached to the Government's report.

The CGTP indicates that the purchasing power of the minimum wage evolved positively between 2007 and 2010, following the implementation of a tripartite agreement concluded in December 2006 concerning the mid-term evolution of the minimum wage. However, according to the CGTP, the economic crisis was cited in 2011 to justify non-compliance with this agreement, and the minimum wage was not adjusted in 2012, resulting in a significant drop in its purchasing power and the loss of a proportion of the accumulated gains made between 2007 and 2010. The CGTP considers that this development is particularly important because of the high number of workers being paid low wages, because the amount of the minimum wage is close to the poverty line, and because of the gap between the minimum wage amount and the average wage in the private sector. The CGTP refers to Legislative Decree No. 143/2010 of 31 December 2010, which set the amount of the minimum wage for 2011 at €485 per month, while setting the objective of increasing the minimum wage to €500 following two evaluations which were due to take place in May and September 2011. The CGTP alleges that the planned evaluations did not take place and that the social partners were not consulted in May and September 2011. According to the union, it was only in May 2012 that the matter was discussed within the Standing Committee on Social Dialogue (CPDS), without any decision being taken regarding the adjustment of the minimum wage. The CGTP considers that the difficult economic context does not make revision of the minimum wage any less necessary. On the contrary, in addition to meeting the requirement of protection of the least paid workers, an increase of the minimum wage would constitute a means of fostering economic growth by supporting internal demand.

In its observations, the UGT also refers to the Government's decision to set the minimum wage at €485 for 2011, emphasizing that the Government based its decision on the economic policy conditions established in the Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) concluded with the troika (European Commission, European Central Bank (ECB) and the International Monetary Fund (IMF)). The UGT affirms that the evaluations planned under Legislative Decree No. 143/2010 were not conducted within the CPDS and that the amount of the minimum wage has been maintained at €485. It recalls that the Labour Code provides that the amount of the minimum wage shall be fixed annually by legislative means, after consultation of the CPDS, and alleges that it was only following pressure exerted by union representatives that the Government placed this matter on the work agenda of the CPDS, during a meeting which was only held in May 2012. Furthermore, according to the UGT, the Government merely informed the social partners at this meeting that the amount of the minimum wage would not be adjusted and would therefore be maintained at €485. The union considers that factors such as the needs of workers and the increase in the cost of living, and not just economic objectives, must be taken into account when fixing the minimum wage, as provided for by the Convention. The UGT considers that, in the current context of crisis, marked by the increase of poverty and exclusion, it is very important to take account of these factors. Like the CGTP, it considers that an increase in the minimum wage would have a positive impact on the internal market, this being a key element in a period of recession for reviving growth and developing or maintaining employment.

In its reply, the Government indicates that the high unemployment rate that currently exists in the country constitutes the main obstacle to increasing the minimum wage. The Government refers to a study published in September 2011 by the Universities of Porto and Minho, the conclusions of which report a negative impact on employment of the increases in the minimum wage since 2006, particularly for the most vulnerable categories of workers, and which emphasizes that immediately increasing the minimum wage to €500 would result in a reduction in the employment rate of between 0.01 and 0.34 per cent.

The Committee also notes a study published in January 2012 by the Bank of Portugal on the impact of the minimum wage on the lowest paid workers, which also underlines the negative impact on employment of the recent increases in the minimum wage and, because of the greater staff turnover in companies, their detrimental effect on productivity, training and corporate progress in the internal labour market. The Government further refers to the extreme fragility of the Portuguese labour market, which features a high rate of unemployment and a significant percentage of newcomers to the labour market who are earning the minimum wage. The Government indicates that the decision relating to the fixing of the minimum wage is preceded by a hearing held with the social partners within the CPDS. It explains that the amount of the minimum wage was frozen in 2012 in the context of the financial assistance programme which was the subject of the agreement between the Portuguese Government, the European Commission, the ECB and the IMF. However, the Government asserts that the above considerations do not mean that it considers this subject any less relevant and it has proposed to the CPDS, as follow-up, to conduct a study on the evolution of the minimum wage for 2013.

The Committee notes that the Government, faced with the worsening financial situation of the country, requested and obtained financial assistance from the European Union and the IMF, and that the MoU establishing an economic adjustment programme for the 2011–14 period was concluded on 17 May 2011. It notes that, under the terms of the MoU, the Government undertook, in return for the financial aid granted, to only make increases in the minimum wage if the latter were justified by changes that had occurred in economic and labour market terms, and only after the conclusion of an agreement to this end as part of a review of the financial assistance programme. The Committee notes that the Government, as part of the implementation of the MoU, decided to increase the amount of the minimum wage to €485 for 2011 – and not to €500, as had been agreed in a tripartite agreement concluded in 2006 – and to freeze this amount for 2012.

The Committee is fully aware of the significant economic difficulties currently faced by the Government and notes the conclusions of the economic studies attached to its report describing the negative impact on employment caused by the latest increases in the minimum wage. However, the Committee wishes to recall that “minimum wage fixing should constitute one element in a policy designed to overcome poverty and to ensure the satisfaction of the needs of all workers and their families”, as emphasized in the Minimum Wage Fixing Recommendation, 1970 (No. 135), which complements Convention No. 131. It notes from the information sent by the Government in its report that the percentage of full-time workers who are paid the minimum wage increased from 6 per cent in 2007 to 11.3 per cent in 2011, and that decisions taken with regard to the minimum wage therefore have an impact on a large number of workers.

The Committee recalls that Article 3 of the Convention requires that the elements to be taken into consideration in determining the level of minimum wages must include not only economic factors, such as employment policy objectives, but also the needs of workers and their families, taking into account the general level of wages in the country, the cost of living, social security benefits, and the relative living standards of other social groups. The Committee further recalls that the Global Jobs Pact, adopted by the International Labour Conference in June 2009 in response to the global economic crisis, underlines the relevance of ILO instruments relating to wages, in order to prevent a downward spiral in labour conditions and build the recovery (paragraph 14), suggests that governments should consider options such as minimum wages that can reduce poverty and inequity, increase demand and contribute to economic stability (paragraph 23), and asserts that, in order to avoid deflationary wage spirals, minimum wages should be regularly reviewed and adapted (paragraph 12).

The Committee considers that the fixing of fair minimum wages, in concertation with the social partners, constitutes a key element of the Decent Work Agenda and contributes to achieving the objectives of social justice and peace and the prevention of unfair competition, which the ILO has pursued since its creation. Moreover, as underlined by the Global Jobs Pact, the regular adjustment of minimum wages in the context of economic crisis can avoid deflationary wage spirals and promote economic recovery as a result of stimulation of demand. In any case, the Committee stresses the fundamental nature of the principle of full consultation and direct participation, on an equal footing, of the social partners in the application of the minimum wage fixing machinery. This principle should be observed under all conditions, since the implementation of an economic adjustment programme or, in more general terms, an austerity policy in response to a crisis situation cannot release governments from their responsibilities in this field. On the contrary, the principle of full consultation and direct participation of the social partners assumes particular importance in periods of economic and social crisis, owing to the considerable repercussions that decisions relating to the fixing and periodic adjustment of minimum wages are likely to have on economic policy, including employment policy, and the purchasing power of workers. Open and constructive social dialogue facilitates the adoption of balanced measures to ensure a fair division of the efforts to be made to overcome the crisis, thereby promoting support for reforms and the maintenance of social cohesion. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will conduct useful and effective consultations with employers' and workers' organizations represented within the Standing Committee on Social Dialogue before taking any decisions regarding the possible readjustment of the amount of the minimum wage, and that it will take full account in its decision-making as much of the needs of workers and their families as of economic policy objectives.

Article 2(1). Binding force of the minimum wage. The Committee refers to its previous comment, in which it noted that the penalties established by Act No. 35/2004 issuing implementing regulations for the Labour Code of 2003 did not apply to infringements of the provisions of this Act establishing minimum wage rates for apprentices, trainees and workers with reduced working capacity. It notes that the UGT asserts in its observations that Act No. 7/2009 of 12 February 2009 issuing the new Labour Code still makes no provision for penalties in the event of failure to apply the minimum wage applicable to apprentices, trainees and interns, which is 20 per cent lower than the minimum wage applicable to other workers. The UGT considers that section 275 of the Labour Code of 2009 should be amended in order to provide for specific penalties for failure to observe the minimum wage applicable to these categories of workers. The Committee requests the Government to specify what penalties are applicable for failure to comply with section 275(1) of the Labour Code. If such penalties are not provided for by the Labour Code, the Government is requested to indicate the measures that it is contemplating in order to ensure that the workers concerned are not paid wages lower than the minimum fixed by this provision.

Romania

Articles 8 and 10 of the Convention. Deductions from wages – Attachment of wages. The Committee notes the comments of the Federation of Free Trade Unions of the Chemical and Petrochemical Industries (FSLCP), which were received on 5 June 2012, concerning the application of the Convention. The FSLCP denounces the 25 per cent wage reduction which was decided by the Government in 2010 and which affects 1.3 million public sector employees as an abusive, illegal and inopportune measure. The FSLCP indicates that this austerity measure was introduced through Act No. 118/2010 without any prior consultations and contrary to the provisions of applicable collective agreements, and therefore amounts to a unilateral alteration of the terms of employment contracts of public employees in clear violation of Articles 8 and 10 of the Convention. The FSLCP further indicates that the 25 per cent wage reduction across the public sector, which was initially introduced for a limited period of six months to restore budgetary stability, continues to apply more than two years after its introduction despite court decisions which have upheld public employees' claims and confirmed the obligation to return to the pre-2010 salary levels.

In its reply, the Government indicates that the budget expenditure for salaries of public employees is determined within the limits established by the financial agreement concluded with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and Government priorities for fiscal consolidation measures. It also indicates that taking into account the evolution of macroeconomic indicators and the measures agreed with the international financial institutions, the Government initiated a real and transparent social dialogue with the social partners, and issued an Emergency Ordinance approving measures for the recovery of the wage reductions made under Act No. 118/2010. A first pay increase of 8 per cent was made in June 2012 and another increase of 7.4 per cent is planned for December 2012 aiming at restoring the public wage levels of June 2010. Finally, the Government makes reference to the Constitutional Court Decision No. 872 of June 2010 and the ruling of the European Court of Human Rights in the cases Mihaies v. Romania (44232/11) and Sentes v. Romania (44605/11), which upheld the legitimacy of pay cuts decided in pursuance of public interest imperatives. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the progressive restoration of public wages to their pre-2010 levels in accordance with the abovementioned emergency ordinance and the Letter of Intent addressed to the IMF in June 2012.

In addition, the Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1962)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee has been commenting for over 30 years on the Government's failure to enact legislation or adopt other measures with a view to implementing the basic requirements of the Convention. In its last report, the Government refers to Ministerial Order No. 5 of 13 July 2010 concerning written contracts of employment, which, however, bears little relevance to public contracts within the meaning of Article 1(1) of the Convention or to the labour clauses that public contracts should include as required under Article 2(1) of the Convention. The Committee once again recalls that the fact that the general labour legislation applies to workers engaged in the execution of public contracts, as provided for in section 96 of the Public Procurement Act of 2007, does not in itself give effect to Article 2 of the Convention which requires the insertion, in all public contracts to which the Convention applies, of labour clauses ensuring that the workers concerned benefit from wages, hours of work and other conditions of labour which are not less favourable than those established for work of the same character in the same area by collective agreement, arbitration award or national laws or regulations.

As the Committee has pointed out on a number of occasions, the legislation to which the Government refers in most cases lays down minimum standards, for instance as regards wage levels, and does not necessarily reflect the actual working conditions of workers. Thus, if the legislation lays down a minimum wage but workers in a particular profession are actually receiving higher wages, the Convention would require that any workers engaged in the execution of a public contract – in the same area and for work of the same character – be entitled to receive the prevailing wage rather than the minimum wage prescribed in the legislation.

In other terms, the application of the general labour legislation is not sufficient to ensure the application of the Convention, in as much as the minimum standards fixed by law are often improved upon by means of collective agreement or otherwise. The Committee therefore asks the Government once more to take steps without further delay in order to bring the national legislation into conformity with the provisions of the Convention, especially as regards: the determination of the terms of the labour clauses to be included in contracts after consultation with organizations of employers and workers concerned (Article 2(3)); the dissemination of those clauses, by advertising specifications or otherwise, so that tenderers are aware of the terms of the clauses (Article 2(4)); the posting of notices in conspicuous places to ensure that workers are informed of the conditions of work applicable to them (Article 4(a)(iii)); and the system of adequate sanctions, by the withholding of contracts or of payments due, for failure to apply the provisions of labour clauses (Article 5). Moreover, noting that under the Public Procurement Act of 2007, the Rwanda Public Procurement Authority (RPPA) is responsible for regulating and monitoring all public procurement operations, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on any measures taken or planned by the RPPA with a view to ensuring fair labour conditions for those engaged in the execution of public contracts.

Serbia

Articles 1 to 5 of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing system. The Committee recalls the comments of the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia (CATUS), which were transmitted to the Government on 3 October 2011, concerning alleged abusive pay practices in five construction and road maintenance companies of the Nibens group. According to CATUS, lack of effective control and inspection have permitted these heavily indebted and recently privatized companies not to pay the minimum wage for months creating a critical situation for more than 5,000 workers.

In its reply, the Government indicates that very limited cases of non-payment or delayed payment of wages have been identified in three companies, "Kragujevac", "Beograd" and "Vojvodinaput Bačkaput", and administrative proceedings have been initiated by the inspection services. While noting the Government's explanations, the Committee would appreciate receiving more detailed information on the outcome of the proceedings against the enterprises concerned (amount of fines imposed, sums of wages recovered, etc.) as well as any other measures taken to prevent and punish infringements of the minimum wage legislation.

Furthermore, the Committee notes the comments of the Trade Union Confederation (TUC) “Nezavisnost” which were attached to the Government’s report. The TUC “Nezavisnost” refers to problems in the practical application of the Convention such as abusive practices whereby employers decide to pay wages but not corresponding contributions, or inversely, to pay contributions but not the wages, and cases of employees who after having been paid the minimum wage are requested by the employer to return part of the amount received. The TUC “Nezavisnost” also indicates that the current minimum wage rate covers only one third of the average consumer basket and less than even the minimum consumer basket, and therefore the basic needs of workers and their families are not satisfied even when employers comply with the minimum wage legislation.

Moreover, the Committee notes the comments of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions, dated 31 August 2012 and transmitted by the Government on 30 October 2012. The Confederation of Free Trade Unions points to serious difficulties of enforcement and indicates that there are practically no sanctions for employers violating the minimum wage legislation. The Confederation also considers that the minimum wage is far from reflecting the real economic conditions and is not sufficient to cover the most basic subsistence needs of workers. The Committee requests the Government to submit any comments it may wish to make in response to the comments of the TUC “Nezavisnost” and the Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee asks the Government to submit a detailed report on the state of national law and practice regarding labour clauses in public contracts in the light of recently introduced public procurement reforms, including the adoption of the Public Procurement Act, 2004.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 16 of the Convention. Full information on legislative amendments. While recalling that the Government has been referring for the last ten years to the imminent adoption of new labour legislation and also recalling that draft amendments had been prepared with the assistance of the Office more than 20 years ago in order to bring the national legislation into conformity with the requirements of the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary steps without further delay to enact the new law and reminds the Government of the availability of further ILO technical assistance in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Spain

Article 2 of the Convention. Inclusion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee takes note of the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Workers’ Committees (CC.OO.) set out in a communication of 13 August 2012. It notes that according to the CC.OO., Spanish legislation does not ensure implementation of the essential requirement set in the Convention, namely the inclusion of labour clauses in public contracts, in accordance with Article 2(1). The Committee notes that the CC.OO. refers to section 84(2) of the Workers’ Statute as amended by Royal Legislative Decree No. 3/2012 of 10 February 2012 to establish urgent measures for the reform of the labour market and by the eponymous Act of 6 July 2012, No. 3/2012. According to this provision, enterprise agreements take priority over sectoral collective agreements applying at national, autonomous community or a lower level, in respect of the amount of the wage, the payment of overtime, special remuneration for shift work, and working time and its distribution. The CC.OO. considers that application of the Convention is thus not guaranteed since an enterprise may, provided it meets the statutory minimum standards, establish conditions of work which are lower than those set in sectoral collective agreements and thus fall far short of the Convention’s requirement that they be at least as favourable as those established for work of the same character in the trade or industry concerned in the same district.

In its reply, received on 20 November 2012, the Government expresses the view that the new regulations on collective bargaining deriving from the labour law reform of 2012 do not impact on the application of Article 2(1) of the Convention. Firstly, according to the Government, the primacy of enterprise agreements over sectoral agreements does not affect at all the existence of sectoral agreements. Secondly, the Convention offers three regulatory benchmarks for evaluating the working conditions of persons employed by a contractor who has been awarded a public contract: a collective agreement covering a substantial number of employers and workers, an arbitration award, and national laws.

The primacy attributed to enterprise agreements affects, therefore, only one of these benchmarks. The Government also indicates that all contractors, with respect to their employees, have to comply with obligations laid down by the labour legislation. This obligation is set out in most of the administrative specifications approved by the competent organs of the State, autonomous communities and local entities. Moreover, the Government refers to Royal Legislative Decree No. 3/2011 of 14 November 2011 regarding the consolidated text of the Public Contracts Act, section 60 of which prohibits persons who have been convicted for offences against workers' rights or who have been sanctioned for very serious violations in social matters to be parties to a public contract. The Government concludes that there is no special social legislation for enterprises which conclude contracts with the public administration, as the general legislation applies to them in all matters.

The Committee notes the adoption of Royal Legislative Decree No. 3/2011 which repeals in particular Act No. 30/2007 of 30 October 2007 on public contracts, to which the Committee referred in its previous comment. It observes, however, that this text, just like the previous legislation, does not give effect to the main provisions of the Convention, and, in particular, it does not require the insertion of labour clauses of the type prescribed by Article 2(1) of the Convention in all public contracts to which it applies. In fact, contrary to what the Government maintains, this provision does not offer an option to select among three different ways of regulating the working conditions for its implementation. In reality, what the Convention requires is that enterprises must provide workers engaged in the execution of public contracts with wages and other conditions of work which are at least as favourable as the highest standards established in the same region by collective agreement, arbitration award or legislation. When, as in the case of Spain, labour legislation only fixes minimum standards that are improved through collective bargaining, the application of the general labour legislation to the conditions of execution of public contracts is not sufficient to ensure the application of the Convention.

Furthermore, the collective agreements referred to in Article 2(1) of the Convention are those established for work of the same character in the district where work is carried on for the execution of the public contract, and applied to a substantial proportion of the employers and workers in the trade or industry concerned. In this regard, the Committee notes that under section 84(2) of the Workers' statute, as amended by Royal Legislative Decree No. 3/2012 and by Act No. 3/2012 of 6 July 2012, enterprise agreements may derogate from sectoral agreements with respect to, among others, wages and working time. The collective bargaining reform adopted in 2012 does not appear, therefore, to ensure the implementation of the Convention, in so far as an enterprise party to a public contract may conclude an enterprise agreement providing for less favourable working conditions than those fixed under collective agreements applicable to a substantial proportion of employers and workers in the sector of economic activity concerned.

The Committee also notes that under section 73 of Royal Legislative Decree No. 3/2011, contractors may, by means of a declaration before a judge or an administrative certificate, prove that they are not banned from being parties to a public contract by virtue of section 60 of the same Decree. It observes that this provision, even though it may be a useful tool to fight against infringements of the labour legislation, is not sufficient to ensure full conformity with the Convention. Firstly, as indicated above, labour clauses seek to ensure compliance not only with the labour legislation, but also with applicable collective agreements and arbitration awards. In addition, as the Committee has pointed out in its 2008 General Survey on labour clauses in public contracts (paragraph 118), the insertion of labour clauses in public contracts under the Convention goes beyond the aims of simple certification, as its purpose is to eliminate the negative effects of competitive tendering on the workers' labour conditions. The mere indication that the contractor concerned has no record of labour law violation in previously completed works is not sufficient to meet its requirements. In fact, certification offers some proof about tenderers' past performance and law-abiding conduct but carries no binding commitment with regard to prospective operations as labour clauses do.

In light of the foregoing, the Committee is bound to conclude that the national legislation does not give effect to Article 2(1) of the Convention, and urges the Government to take without delay the necessary measures in order to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention. It requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decision it intends to take in this regard.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1971)

Article 3 of the Convention. Elements to be taken into consideration in determining the level of minimum wages. The Committee notes the observations made by the Trade Union Confederation of Workers' Commissions (CC.OO.) and the General Union of Workers (UGT) in communications dated 13 and 31 August 2012, respectively. It notes that, according to the CC.OO., the purchasing power of the interoccupational minimum wage (SMI) has been decreasing every year since 2010 and the SMI has corresponded to an increasingly small proportion of the average wage since 2007. The CC.OO. recalls that the Spanish minimum wage is one of the lowest in the "EU15", without this situation being justified by differences in hourly productivity levels. It considers that the economic crisis cannot be used as a pretext for abandoning the objective of attaining a minimum wage corresponding to 60 per cent of the average wage, which is the percentage considered to be fair in the context of implementation of the European Social Charter. The CC.OO. is asking the Government to restore the loss in purchasing power of the SMI which has been recorded since 2010 and is calling for a reform of section 27 of the Workers' Statute in order to establish new criteria for fixing the amount of the SMI on an annual basis. The Committee further notes that the UGT refers in its observations to the loss of purchasing power of the SMI since 2010, and the freeze of the amount of the SMI in 2012, as well as the increased gap between the SMI and the average wage.

The Committee notes that, in its reply to the observations made by the CC.OO. and the UGT, the Government provides information on the evolution of the SMI, the consumer price index (IPC) and the gross average wage between 2006 and 2011. The Government points out that, by virtue of section 27 of the Workers' Statute, the amount of the SMI is determined not only on the basis of the IPC but also other factors such as national average productivity, increased worker participation to the national revenue and the general economic environment. The freeze of the SMI for 2012 followed a period of six years of increases beyond the increase of the IPC but this tendency could no longer be maintained because of the economic crisis. Despite the small number of workers receiving the SMI, an increase of the minimum wage by 1 per cent has an impact of €57 million on the State budget because of the direct link between the amount of the SMI and the reference base for calculating social security contributions. Such an increase also results in an increase of the expenditure of the Wage Guarantee Fund by €3.066 billion and an increase of the expenditure related to unemployment benefits by €17.3 million.

The Committee notes that in its report on the application of the Convention, the Government also provides information on the evolution of the SMI since 2008, indicating that, at the time of the increase of the SMI in 2011, account was taken in particular of the economic recession and the need to pursue a moderate wage policy with a view to contributing to economic recovery and job creation. The Government also refers to a resolution adopted on 30 January 2012 by the Directorate-General of Employment, which registers an agreement for employment and collective bargaining for 2012–14 concluded by the Spanish Confederation of Employers' Organizations (CEOE), the Spanish Confederation of Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises (CEPYME), the CC.OO. and the UGT. This agreement provides, inter alia, for wage moderation in collective bargaining and defines the criteria to be used for this purpose.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that the European Committee on Social Rights considered in 2010 that the situation in Spain was not in conformity with the European Social Charter on the grounds that the minimum wage was clearly unfair, based on the statistical information published by the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), according to which the SMI corresponded in 2010 to 35 per cent of the average wage for full-time workers. It further notes that Royal Decree No. 1888/2011 of 30 December 2011, fixing the interoccupational minimum wage for 2012 has maintained the amount of the SMI at the same level as that which was in force in 2011, as confirmed by the Government. This decision was justified, according to the preamble to the Royal Decree, by the economic context which made it preferable, for 2012, to adopt wage policies contributing to the priority objective of economic recovery and job creation.

While being fully aware of the major economic difficulties currently faced by Spain, the Committee considers that the fixing of minimum wages in concertation with the social partners and enabling workers to meet their needs as well as those of their families is a key element for decent work, particularly in periods of economic and social crisis. It refers, in this regard, to the Global Jobs Pact, adopted by the International Labour Conference in June 2009 in response to the global economic crisis, an instrument which underlines the relevance of ILO instruments relating to wages in order to prevent a downward spiral in labour conditions and build the recovery (paragraph 14). The Pact also suggests that governments should consider options such as minimum wages that can reduce poverty and inequity, increase demand and contribute to economic stability (paragraph 23), and it provides that, in order to avoid deflationary wage spirals, minimum wages should be regularly reviewed and adapted (paragraph 12). The Committee hopes that the Government will endeavour to take full account of the needs of workers and their families, and not just the objectives of economic policy, when undertaking the annual adjustment of the minimum wage in future, avoiding depreciations in the purchasing power of the SMI, and that it will fully involve the social partners, on an equal footing, in decision-making in this field.

Finally, with regard to the relationship between the SMI and social security contributions or benefits, the Committee had noted in its previous direct request that, by virtue of section 1 of Royal Legislative Decree No. 3/2004 of 25 June 2004, the SMI no longer served as a basis for calculating certain social benefits and had been replaced to this end by the public indicator of multiple effect income (IPREM). The Committee requests the Government to provide additional explanations on this point, in the light of the information that it has communicated concerning the budgetary impact of minimum wage increases.

Sudan

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 3, paragraph 2(2), of the Convention. Consultation and participation of employers and workers. The Committee has been commenting for many years on section 4 of the Wages and Conditions of Employment Tribunals Act of 1976 which, contrary to the Wages Tribunal Ordinance of 1952, does not provide for equal representation of employers' and workers' organizations in the wages tribunals. The Government has indicated on several occasions that, in practice, employers' and workers' representatives have always participated in equal numbers in the operation of minimum wage fixing bodies but gave assurances that the relevant provision in the legislation would still be amended to give effect to the provisions of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee wishes to stress that the requirement for genuine and effective consultations with employers' and workers' organizations and their participation in equal numbers and on equal terms in the minimum wage fixing process is a key element of the Convention. The Committee trusts that the Government will provide in its next report full particulars on the effect given to the requirements of Article 3 of the Convention, in law and practice.

In addition, the Committee notes that the information contained in the Government's reports is often fragmentary, undocumented and fails to give a comprehensive picture of the minimum wage system in the country. The Committee understands that minimum wage rates are fixed: (i) at the national level under the Minimum Wage Act of 1974, as amended, for enterprises employing more than ten employees; (ii) by wages tribunals under the Wages and Conditions of Employment Tribunals Act of 1976 for specific categories of workers; and (iii) through collective bargaining. The Committee also understands that the national monthly minimum wage is currently set at 200 Sudanese pounds (approximately US$45). The Committee would be grateful if the Government would specify in its next report whether the different minimum wage fixing methods mentioned above are still in effect, and also provide copies of all relevant legal instruments establishing minimum wage rates currently in force.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1970)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 4, 6, 8, 10, 13 and 14 of the Convention. Revision of the labour legislation. The Committee has been commenting for some years on numerous divergences that persist between the Labour Act 1997 currently in force and certain provisions of the Convention. In its last report, the Government confined itself to reiterating that a tripartite committee had been set up to prepare a new consolidated draft Labour Code and that technical assistance had already been received from the Office to this effect. The Committee asks the Government to keep the Office informed of the revision process and to transmit a copy of the new draft Labour Act, once it has been finalized. In particular, the Committee asks the Government to indicate whether the new labour legislation is expected to extend its coverage to agricultural and other categories of workers currently excluded, and how it is intended to give effect to the specific requirements of Articles 4 (partial payment of wages in kind), 6 (freedom of workers to dispose of their wages), 8 (deductions from wages based on individual agreement), 10 (conditions and limits of attachment of wages), 13 (place of wage payment) and 14 (notification of wage conditions and statement of earnings) of the Convention.

The Committee recalls, in this connection, that the General Survey of 2003 on the protection of wages contains documented information and practical guidance as to how legislative conformity with the Convention may be attained. It also recalls that the Government may continue to draw upon the technical advice and expertise of the Office on these matters, if it so wishes.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Suriname

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1976)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. Further to its previous observations drawing attention to the absence of implementing legislation, the Committee notes the Government's reference to the standards for the procurement of works (AWS 1996), the standards for the administrative execution of works (UWS 1996), and the standards for the procurement of services (ADS 1996). These rules address in part the working conditions applicable to workers engaged in the execution of public contracts, but, as the Government's report indicates, they do not expressly provide for the inclusion of labour clauses such as those prescribed by the Convention. The rules merely confirm the applicability of the general labour legislation to public procurement operations, which in itself is not sufficient to meet the requirements of this Article of the Convention, as the Committee has been pointing out for a number of years.

In this connection, the Committee notes the loan contract concluded in 2011 with the Inter-American Development Bank to assist the reform effort in the area of, among others, public procurement. The Committee also notes that the programme is planned to address identified weaknesses of the public procurement system, such as an outdated, disperse and incomplete legal framework characterized by a multiplicity of legal instruments and lack of clarity. The programme aims at the adoption of a new institutional framework in accordance with best international practices, the development of standardized procurement processes and procedures, including regulations, guidelines and handbooks, and the preparation of a legislative proposal to be submitted to the National Assembly to unify and consolidate in law the principles and key regulations developed during the programme. Considering that this reform process offers a clear opportunity to adopt laws and regulations giving full effect to the provisions of the Convention, the Committee hopes that the Government will take all the necessary measures in a timely manner to ensure that the legislative text to be developed through the Public Capital Expenditure Management Programme financed by the Inter-American Development Bank complies with the standards set out in the Convention.

Turkey

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Coverage and determination of minimum wage levels. The Committee notes the comments made by the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations (TISK) and the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-IS) concerning the application of the Convention.

TISK continues to consider inadvisable to bring home-based trades within the scope of the minimum wage legislation. Not only is it impossible to determine the minimum wage for piecework, bearing in mind that home working trades are usually engaged in piecework, but it is also not always clear whether those working at home are self-employed or parties to an employment relationship. As regards the periodic readjustment of the minimum wage, TISK maintains that other economic factors apart from the inflation rate should be taken into consideration, such as for instance the economic crisis, market slowdown, decline in productivity, and increased unemployment. TISK suggests that lower minimum wages should apply to young persons as from the age of 20 rather than the age of 16 in an effort to prevent the growing youth unemployment. Finally, TISK considers that the fight against the informal economy would need lower taxation, simplifying bureaucracy and additional incentives for formal employment.

TÜRK-IS believes that the level of the minimum wage is far from adequate to provide a humane standard of living and that the country's economic situation is used as an excuse for keeping the minimum wage exceptionally low. The workers' organization also states that while the economy has grown by 35 per cent over the past four years, workers remunerated at the minimum pay rate have not been able to share any concrete benefits. According to statistics of the social security institution, two out of every five formal workers are paid at the minimum wage. Moreover, TÜRK-IS alleges that at present the minimum wage can hardly cover 64 per cent of the hunger level and 20 per cent of the poverty level, which means that a working family receiving the minimum wage can eat healthily for just 19 days and can enjoy a decent standard of living for only six days per month. Finally, TÜRK-IS draws attention to the homeworking trades which are not protected by minimum wage legislation and also to the important ongoing problem of informal employment. The Committee requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in reply to the observations of TISK and TÜRK-IS.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes the comments made by the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations (TISK) and the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-IS) concerning the application of the Convention. TISK refers to some new provisions introduced in section 2 of Labour Act No. 4857 by virtue of Act No. 5538 of 1 July 2006, according to which workers employed in the execution of a public contract may not be appointed to a position of the contracting public authority or have access to any benefits and entitlements provided to the employees of the contracting public authority. Under the same provisions, public contracts for services may not contain provisions which empower the contracting public authority to recruit or terminate the employment of workers or which guarantee continued employment to workers engaged in the performance of a public contract. In this connection, TISK admits that the new provisions were introduced in order to prevent the malpractices experienced under the previous Labour Act No. 1475, but considers the provisions in question to be unconstitutional and to have rendered the system of public contracting impossible to manage. For its part, TÜRK-IS states that the newly added paragraphs in section 2 of the Labour Act contravene the standards set out in the Convention without further elaborating. The Committee requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in reply to the observations of TISK and TÜRK-IS.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's detailed report and its attachments, in particular the comments made by the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations (TISK) and the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-IS) on the application of the Convention. It also notes the comments made by the Confederation of Turkish Public Employees Trade Unions (KAMU-SEN), which were appended to the Government's report received in October 2003. The Committee further notes the adoption of the new Labour Law No. 4857 of 22 May 2003 revising the old Labour Law No. 1475 of 25 August 1971.

Article 12, paragraph 1, of the Convention. Non-payment or delayed payment of wages. The Committee notes that employers' and workers' organizations have been commenting for a number of years on problems concerning the non-payment or delayed payment of wages. TÜRK-IS indicates that the amounts owed to workers in the form of unpaid or only partially paid wages and social benefits and bonuses are reaching high levels. The situation affects considerable numbers of workers in the private sector but also municipal workers. For KAMU-SEN, the dramatic drop in real wages, mainly because of inflation and increasing production costs, pushes workers to depression. TISK believes that excessive financial obligations, such as high tax and social insurance contributions imposed on registered workers and employers, increase the difference between gross and net wages, and diminish the country's competitiveness. In fact, Turkey has been on top of the OECD list of countries with the highest labour employment costs: 42.8 per cent of average labour costs have consisted of payroll taxes since 2006, as compared to 27.5 per cent for other OECD countries and 11.7 per cent for EU countries. For TISK, the heavy tax and social insurance burden boost the informal sector and render the economy less competitive.

Concerning these points, the Government states that the delays in the payment of wages are caused mainly by the economic crisis affecting all enterprises or organizations, private or public. The Government also refers to sections 33 and 34 of the new Labour Law as measures to address this situation through legislation. Section 33 establishes a Wages Guarantee Fund within the Unemployment Insurance Fund, which is financed by 1 per cent of the contributions to the unemployment insurance by the employers. Section 34 provides that workers may at their discretion decide not to work if the employer does not pay the wage due within 20 days of the pay day, which must not be construed as a strike or be considered as a ground for termination of the worker's employment contract, and that an interest at the highest commercial rate must be applied to the sum of wages due to the worker. As regards the situation of wage payment in the public sector, the Government makes reference to the results of a survey by the Ministry of Interior showing that there are nearly 5,500 public officers affected across 188 municipalities involving an amount of approximately 5,781,147 new Turkish liras (approximately US$4.6 million). In this connection, the Government indicates that the legislation regulating the finance and personnel affairs in public administration, such as Act No. 5018 concerning the administration of public finance and audit, and Act No. 5620 on the transfer to permanent posts or contractual personnel status of workers temporarily employed in the public administration, ensures that wages of public officers are paid regularly and in full. The Committee recalls in this connection paragraphs 358 and 366 of its General Survey of 2003 on the protection of wages, in which it pointed out that whatever the intricate causes of the problem of wage arrears, the deferred payment of wages is part of a vicious circle that inexorably affects the entire national economy. The Committee hopes that the Government will continue its efforts for devising appropriate solutions to the problem of delayed or non-payment of wages through social dialogue and better implementation of the labour legislation. The Committee accordingly requests the Government to closely monitor the situation and continue to provide up to date information on the number of workers and types of enterprises affected by accumulated wage arrears and any progress made in settling outstanding payments in both the public and private sector. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in reply to the latest observations of TISK and TÜRK-İS.

Article 15. Enforcement and legal remedies. According to TÜRK-İS the difficulties experienced in the protection of workers' wages are mainly due to the considerable difference between the legal provisions in place and their practical application, or in other words to the lack of effective penalties. In contrast, TISK considers that legal provisions on penalties are sufficient. It also states that the increase of administrative fines would not safeguard the full respect of the wage legislation, as long as the employers are deprived of their financial strength to secure resources for the payment of wages. In this regard, the Government refers to section 102 of the new Labour Law prescribing an administrative fine of 100 Turkish New Lira (TRY) (approximately US$83), to be annually readjusted under section 17 of Act No. 5326 of 30 March 2005, for failure to pay the wages in full. The Government explains that based on these provisions, an employer would currently be liable to a fine of TRY167 (approximately US$138) for each month of non-payment or underpayment of the worker's wage. It also refers to the possibility to file a complaint with the labour courts under section 61 of Act No. 2822 on collective labour agreements which provides for a lawsuit for payment that carries payment of interest at the highest commercial rate. The Committee would be thankful to the Government for providing statistical information on the number of wage-related cases heard by labour courts and the amounts of wages recovered.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Wage Fixing Machinery (Agriculture) Convention, 1951 (No. 99) (ratification: 1970)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 4 of the Convention. Scope of application and enforcement of minimum wage in agriculture. The Committee notes the comments made by the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations (TISK) and the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İS), concerning the application of the Convention.

TISK basically reiterates points it has raised in earlier observations, in particular that bringing partially agricultural enterprises and agricultural workers within the scope of the Labour Law creates problems of application and that a separate legislation would be preferable due to the special characteristics of agricultural work and the social structure in the country.

As for TÜRK-İS, it considers that the measures for control, inspection, and sanctions in the agricultural sector are completely inadequate and, as a result, large numbers of agricultural workers are remunerated at rates below the minimum wage. TÜRK-İS calls, accordingly, for better implementation of Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in reply to the observations of TISK and TÜRK-İS. It would also appreciate receiving a copy of the Statute concerning work regarded as industry, commerce, agriculture and forestry of 28 February 2004 and of the Statute concerning working conditions of workers in agriculture and forestry of 6 April 2004 to which reference was made in TISK's comments.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Uganda

Articles 1 to 4 of the Convention. Establishment and operation of minimum wage-fixing machinery. The Committee has been commenting for several years on the need to readjust the national minimum wage rate which remains unchanged since 1984 at the level of 6,000 Uganda shillings (UGX) (approximately US$2.50) per month. The Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that, in order to be able to fulfil a meaningful role in social policy, the minimum wage should not be allowed to fall below a socially acceptable subsistence level, and that it should maintain its purchasing power in relation to a basic basket of essential consumer goods. Recalling that the Minimum Wages Board last met in 1995 and recommended a monthly minimum wage of UGX75,000, which, however, has never been implemented, the Committee has urged the Government on numerous occasions to take all appropriate measures to reactivate the minimum wage-fixing process based on tripartite consultations. In its last report, the Government limits itself to indicating that steps have been taken in this direction and that at present discussions focus on the composition of the Minimum Wages Board. The Committee understands, however, that the question of setting a new minimum wage has recently been the subject of strong trade union campaigns and vivid parliamentary debate but no concrete progress has been made regarding the revision of the minimum wage. Under the circumstances, the Committee once again urges the Government to take prompt action in order to ensure the reinstatement and proper functioning of the minimum wage-fixing machinery in accordance with the letter and the spirit of the Convention, and recalls that it may draw upon the technical assistance of the Office if it so wishes.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

Ukraine

Article 12(1) of the Convention. Payment of wages at regular intervals – Wage arrears situation. The Committee notes that according to the Government's report, the total amount of wage arrears as of 1 June 2012 stood at 999.9 million Ukrainian hryvna (UAH) (approximately €94 million), which represents a 42.5 per cent decrease from UAH1.79 billion in 2010. The total wage arrears owed to workers in economically active enterprises is UAH479.3 million (approximately €45 million), that is a 58.7 per cent decrease from March 2010, whereas UAH520.5 million (approximately €49 million) are owed to enterprises undergoing procedure to restore solvency or declare bankruptcy. Among economically active enterprises, the manufacturing sector has the highest amount of accumulated wage arrears representing approximately 61.4 per cent of the total amount. Other sectors experiencing serious problems of wage arrears include engineering, construction, transport and communications. Between March 2010 and June 2012, wage arrears declined by 48.3 per cent in the coal mining industry and currently represent 10 per cent of the total wage arrears in economically active enterprises. The Committee notes, in this respect, the comments of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions of Ukraine (KVPU) received on 31 August 2012 describing outstanding wage arrears in coal companies.

Monitoring of the situation – Collection of data. Further to its previous observation, in which the Committee noted that the State Statistics Committee excluded enterprises with less than 50 employees and that there was a lack of confidentiality in the process of collecting reports from enterprises, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the State Statistics Committee now collects data concerning enterprises with more than ten employees and that, pursuant to section 22 of the Act on State statistics, amended on 13 January 2011, the statistics bodies are prohibited from sharing information aside from certain exceptions, including statistical information on levels of wage arrears.

Activities of labour inspection services. According to the statistical information provided by the Government, in 2011, 7,312 inspections were carried out at 4,997 enterprises experiencing wage arrears problems, and as a result, 1,794 fines were issued for a total amount of UAH3.8 million (approximately €360,000) and 299,000 employees received the money they were owed. Similarly, in the first six months of 2012, 2,651 inspections were conducted at 2,029 enterprises, following which 882 fines were imposed amounting to UAH488,200 (approximately €46,250) and 116,500 employees received some or all of the money they were owed.

Bankruptcy proceedings. Further to its previous observation, the Committee notes the Government's statement that it is engaged in ongoing legislative work aimed at ensuring first-rank priority for wage claims in the context of insolvency or bankruptcy proceedings. The Government indicates that a law amending the Act on restoring the solvency of the debtor or declaring it bankrupt, adopted in December 2011 and taking effect in January 2013, will make it possible to reduce wage arrears in bankrupt enterprises. The Committee notes, in this respect, section 241(5) of the new draft Labour Code, which provides that workers' wage claims in insolvency or bankruptcy proceedings are priority debts ranking higher than all other claims, including secured claims, and claims of State social insurance institutions and tax authorities. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that it has established a special working group with the participation of representatives of employers' and workers' organizations and academics to examine the possibility of setting up a wage guarantee fund.

Other measures. The Committee notes that several initiatives have been taken to follow up on the recommendations of the ILO technical assistance mission of May 2011. In this respect, the Government's report outlines various activities, including conferences among high-level government representatives, a sectoral conference and conferences involving the social partners and central and local authorities. Within enterprises, members of management are responsible for conducting weekly wage arrears reports which are then communicated to relevant commissions and local executive authorities. Similarly, interim commissions operate throughout the administrative regions to hear reports from directors of enterprises that have wage arrears and, between March 2010 and June 2012, those interim commissions held 25,701 separate sessions, cautioned 76,005 directors with disciplinary charges, terminated 487 contracts and took 20,480 other measures putting pressure on enterprises.

The Committee is encouraged that the Government continues to address the issue of wage arrears as a matter of priority in full awareness of the scale and complexity of the problem. The Committee is also encouraged that according to official statistics the overall amount of wage arrears continues to be on a decreasing trend. Moreover, the Committee notes that the Deputy Minister of Social Policy and the social partners in meetings they had with ILO officials in July 2012 confirmed the positive results and the new measures taken to resolve the issue of wage arrears. The Committee hopes that the Government will pursue its efforts in a sustained and resolute manner in order to deliver large parts of the national economy from the vicious circle of wage arrears. The Committee also hopes that Government action will focus, among others, on the revision of bankruptcy law, the establishment of a wage guarantee institution, the eradication of the practice of “envelope wages”, the improvement of data collection and the reinforcement of the human resources of the labour inspectorate. The Committee accordingly requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any progress made in these matters.

United Kingdom

Bermuda

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94)

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses into public contracts. In its previous comment, the Committee asked the Government to clarify whether the administrative instructions which had been adopted on 29 December 1962 and which gave effect to the requirements of the Convention, still remained in force or whether they had been amended or replaced by new texts.

In its latest report, the Government indicates that it is unable to answer definitively whether such instructions are still in force. It also indicates that the Good Governance Act 2011, which is operative as from 21 October 2011, established the Office of the Project Management and Procurement within the Ministry of Finance to be responsible for managing the selection and award of government contracts in accordance with principles of transparency and best practice. The Government further states that the Contracts and Compliance Manager within the Office is currently preparing contract templates for public contracts which will include social, economic and environmental criteria in line with international practice. Moreover, the Government states that the current form of contracts used for construction projects has been in use for some time and has been drafted in compliance with internationally recognized standards, such as the International Federation of Consulting Engineers (FIDIC).

While noting these explanations, the Committee wishes to recall the main objective of the Convention which is to promote good governance and socially responsible public procurement by requiring contractors to apply locally established prevailing pay and other working conditions as determined by law or collective agreement. The Convention proposes a common level playing field – in terms of labour standards – for all economic actors so as to ensure fair competition. By requiring all bidders to respect, as a minimum, certain locally established standards, wages, working time and working conditions may not be used as elements of competition and consequently no downward pressure on wages and working conditions may be exerted. Noting that a code of practice for Project Management and Procurement to be followed by all public officers concerned with public procurement operations is currently under preparation under the Good Governance Act 2011, the Committee hopes that the Government will seize this opportunity in order to formulate standard bidding documents incorporating labour clauses for all public contracts (whether for construction works, goods or services) fully aligned with the requirements of Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any progress made in this regard and to transmit a copy of the code of practice once it is adopted.

Uruguay

Article 2 of the Convention. Inclusion of labour clauses in public contracts. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's indication that Decree No. 475/005 of 14 November 2005, which the Committee has previously found to conform fully to the provisions of Article 2 of the Convention, is the main legal text implementing the Convention. The Government adds that Act No. 18.098 of 12 January 2007, which narrows the scope of labour clauses to only the observance of wage rates fixed by wage councils, should not be deemed to supersede Decree No. 475/005.

While noting these clarifications, the Committee once again draws the Government's attention to the fact that both the abovementioned texts apply only to public contracts for services whereas the Convention requires labour clauses to be inserted in all procurement contracts whether for works, goods or services. Recalling that the scope of the Convention is not in any manner limited to services contracts, the Committee asks the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the scope of the provisions of Decree No. 475/005 are extended to cover all types of public contracts. The Committee also asks the Government to amend Act No. 18.098 so as to bring it fully into line with the requirements of this Article of the Convention.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Article 3(2) of the Convention. Minimum wage fixing machinery and consultations with employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee notes the comments of the Federation of Chambers and Associations of Commerce and Production of Venezuela (FEDECAMARAS) of 14 September 2011 transmitted to the Government on 27 September 2011. It also notes the additional comments of FEDECAMARAS, supported by the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), which were received on 31 August 2012 and forwarded to the Government on 24 September 2012. The Committee further notes the comments of the Independent Trade Union Alliance (ASI), which were received on 29 August 2011 and 14 August 2012 and transmitted to the Government on 22 September 2011 and 29 August 2012, respectively. It also notes the Government's replies of 12 November 2012 to the comments of FEDECAMARAS and ASI. Both organizations basically reiterate the allegations reflected in previous communications concerning the absence of meaningful social dialogue in the country and the annual readjustment of the minimum wage by the Government in a unilateral manner.

More concretely, FEDECAMARAS indicates that the minimum wage increase for 2012 was approved through Presidential Decree No. 8920 of 24 April 2012 without consulting the representative employers' organizations or the National Tripartite Commission, which contravenes sections 167–169 of the Basic Labour Act in force at that time. FEDECAMARAS adds that the National Tripartite Commission has not been convened for the last ten years. It considers that the method of consultation used by the Ministry of Labour and Social Security, that is inviting comments within a short time limit of 15 days, does not constitute genuine social dialogue and violates the Convention. FEDECAMARAS also indicates that the committee established for drafting the new Organic Labour Act (LOTTT) (Official Gazette of 7 May 2012) did not adequately represent the employers' organizations. For its part, ASI denounces the Government's clear tendency to set labour policies, including wage policy, without considering the views of employers' and workers' representatives, and indicates that the minimum wage legislation does not define the criteria for the determination of minimum wage levels nor does it set any limits to the Government's discretionary powers in this regard. ASI also alleges that the current minimum wage covers only 43.9 per cent of the basic food basket (canasta alimentaria normativa). According to statistics provided by ASI, from 1999 to 2010, inflation rose by 747 per cent while in the last 12 months prices have increased by 24.6 per cent. The diminishing purchasing power of the minimum wage affects a large number of people as it is estimated that 21.1 per cent of all workers are paid at the minimum wage rate.

In its report, the Government refers to article 91 of the Constitution which provides for the annual readjustment of the minimum wage for workers in the public and private sectors taking into account the cost of the basic food basket, and indicates that the Constituent Assembly of 1999 drafted this article considering the views of workers' representatives who denounced the lack of effectiveness and representativeness of the National Tripartite Commission. The Government indicates that the new LOTTT has been adopted following social dialogue with employers' and workers' representatives. The Committee notes that this Act no longer makes reference to the National Tripartite Commission as the consultative body for fixing minimum wages. It also notes that under section 129 of the new LOTTT, the Government fixes by decree the minimum wage on a yearly basis and for this purpose it invites different social organizations and socio-economic institutions to make known their views. The Government's report specifies that, in practice, every year in January, as many as six trade union confederations and 32 trade union federations as well as five important employers' organizations are consulted, while the Central Bank and the Ministry of Finance are requested to prepare economic reports. The views of workers' and employers' representatives are collected through the web page of the Ministry of Labour, while a committee designated by the President is responsible for preparing a summary of the opinions expressed and the economic reports submitted, prior to the promulgation of the decree fixing the minimum wage by the President. Moreover, the Government indicates that, as of August 2012, the minimum wage of 2,047 bolivar (approximately US$476) plus the food ticket exceeded the value of the basic food basket of 1,835 bolivar (approximately US$427). The Government further indicates that, according to the labour force surveys, there are on the average two workers per household, and therefore the income per household is higher than the minimum wage. The Government finally points out that the minimum wage was raised in 2012 by 32.3 per cent, while the inflation rate was 18 per cent.

While noting the Government's explanations, the Committee wishes to recall once again the fundamental importance it attaches to real and good faith consultations with the social partners for the effective operation of the minimum wage fixing process. As the Committee has pointed out on numerous occasions, "consultation" has a different connotation from mere "information" and from "co-determination". In order to be meaningful, consultations must give employers' and workers' representatives ample opportunity to express their views, and these views must be carefully considered, even if decision-making power ultimately lies with the Government. Noting that the new LOTTT of 2012 introduces a major change in the nature and form of the minimum wage fixing machinery by formally abolishing the National Tripartite Commission, heretofore responsible for making concerted recommendations on the adjustment of the minimum wage, the Committee requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the exact content and views expressed during the consultations prior to that legislative change.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 23 of 14 August 2007 on bidding, outbidding and government warehouses which replaces Act No. 3 of 1997 on the same. The Act regulates, in particular, the award, execution and supervision by the Supreme Commission for Tenders of all public tenders on the basis of equality of treatment and transparency. However, the Committee notes that, contrary to the indications of the Government, Act No. 23 does not provide for the insertion of labour clauses as prescribed by this Article of the Convention. In this connection, the Committee wishes to refer to paragraphs 176–177 of its General Survey of 2008 on labour clauses in public contracts in which it pointed out that “the Convention has a very simple structure, all its provisions being articulated around and directly linked to the core requirement of Article 2(1), that is the insertion of labour clauses ensuring favourable wages and other working conditions to the workers concerned. As a result, in case the national legislation makes no provision for the specific type of labour clause and in the specific terms set out in Article 2(1) of the Convention, the application of the remaining Articles 3, 4 and 5 becomes without object and thus cannot be considered separately.” The Committee went on to observe that “by aligning contract standards to the highest prevailing standards, by excluding the lowering of those standards through subcontracting, and by incorporating those principles into the standard clauses of each and every public contract falling within its scope, the Convention guarantees that public procurement is not a terrain for socially unhealthy competition and can never be associated with poor working and wage conditions.” The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary steps without further delay in order to ensure the application of the basic requirement of the Convention and recalls that it may draw on the expert advice of the Office to this effect.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 4 of the Convention. Full consultation and direct participation of employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it noted that, even though the minimum wage set for public employees (20,000 rials or approximately US$100 per month) may also apply to workers of the private sector in accordance with section 55(1) of the Labour Code, there is no institutionalized mechanism for fixing and revising minimum wages through a consultative process sufficiently representative of employers' and workers' interests. In its last report, the Government indicates that the implementation of the national strategy on wages has been postponed due to the current economic situation. The Government also states that the establishment of the tripartite Labour Council, which is provided for in section 11(1) of the Labour Code, has been deferred in view of the proposed amendment of the Labour Code. Accordingly, the Committee notes with regret that no progress has been made as regards the implementation of the Convention, either in law or in practice. The Committee urges the Government to take, without further delay, all necessary measures in order to set up a minimum wage fixing mechanism based on effective and genuine tripartite consultations. It asks the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments concerning the reactivation of the national strategy on wages, the eventual establishment of the Labour Council and the announced amendment of the Labour Code.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Zambia

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1979)

Article 12 of the Convention. Regular payment of wages. Further to its previous comments concerning accumulated wage debts by local councils in all nine provinces of the country, the Committee notes the statistical information provided by the Government according to which the overall councils' debt, including unpaid salaries, statutory obligations and other creditors, as of December 2011, stood at 671.7 billion Zambian kwacha (approximately US$127 million). Contrary to the data included in the Government's previous report, the latest statistics contain no clear indication as to the total amount of wage arrears and the number of months involved, making it impossible for the Committee to assess the evolution of the situation; nor does the Government's report provide any details on similar difficulties experienced in other economic sectors, such as health care and education. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to communicate together with its next report a detailed account on the problems of non-payment or delayed payment of wages encountered in the country, including up-to-date statistics on the total amount of outstanding payments, the principal sectors affected, the number of workers concerned and the average length of time involved in late payments, and any additional measures taken in order to resolve these problems.

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 26 (Argentina, Austria, Barbados, Bulgaria, Chad, China, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Dominican Republic, Germany, Ghana, Grenada, Hungary, Ireland, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Mali, Mauritania, Mauritius, Morocco, New Zealand, Nigeria, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Senegal, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Slovakia, Solomon Islands, South Africa, Switzerland, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, United Kingdom: Anguilla, United Kingdom: British Virgin Islands, United Kingdom: Montserrat, Zimbabwe); Convention No. 94 (Antigua and Barbuda, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Dominica, France: French Polynesia, Grenada, Guyana, Kenya, Malaysia: Sabah, Malaysia: Sarawak, Mauritania, Mauritius, Netherlands: Curaçao, Netherlands: Sint Maarten, Nigeria, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Solomon Islands, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, United Republic of Tanzania, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Turkey, Uganda, United Kingdom: Anguilla); Convention No. 95 (Argentina, Austria, Azerbaijan, Bahamas, Barbados, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Chad, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Dominican Republic, France, France: French Polynesia, France: New Caledonia, Grenada, Guinea, Guyana, Hungary, Lebanon, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritius, Mexico, Republic of Moldova, Netherlands: Curaçao, Netherlands: Sint Maarten, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigeria, Norway, Panama, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Senegal, Slovakia, Slovenia, Solomon Islands, Spain, Sri Lanka, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, United Republic of Tanzania, Togo, Tunisia, Turkey, Uganda, United Kingdom: Montserrat, Uruguay, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, Yemen); Convention No. 99 (Austria, Czech Republic, Germany, Hungary, Ireland, Kenya, Mauritius, Morocco, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Senegal, Seychelles, Slovakia, Tunisia, Turkey, United Kingdom: Anguilla, United Kingdom: Isle of Man, United Kingdom: Jersey, Zimbabwe); Convention No. 131 (Antigua and Barbuda, Burkina Faso, France: French Polynesia, France: New Caledonia, Iraq, Japan, Kenya, Republic of Korea, Latvia, Lebanon, Lithuania, Malta, Mexico, Republic of Moldova, Montenegro, Nepal, Nicaragua, Niger, Romania, Slovenia, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, Syrian Arab Republic, United Republic of Tanzania, The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Ukraine, Uruguay, Zambia); Convention No. 173 (Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Chad, Latvia, Lithuania, Madagascar, Mexico, Slovakia, Slovenia, Spain, Switzerland, Ukraine).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following State in answer to a direct request with regard to Convention No. 95 (Netherlands).

Working time

Argentina

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1933)

Article 2 of the Convention. Daily and weekly limits of hours of work. The Committee requests the Government to refer to its comments made under Articles 3 and 4 of the Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30).

Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30) (ratification: 1950)

*Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention. Daily and weekly limits of hours of work. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in reply to the comments made in 2011 by the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA) concerning alleged widespread working time irregularities in the commerce and road transport sectors. The Committee notes, in particular, the Government's reference to Decree No. 16.115/33 implementing Act No. 11.544 which reflects the provisions of Article 2 of the Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1), concerning the variable distribution of working hours within a week and the averaging of hours of work in the case of shift work. The Government further refers to section 197 of Act No. 20.744 on labour contract which requires a minimum rest period of 12 hours between two consecutive working days, thus implying that no worker may be employed for more than 12 hours per day. In this respect, the Committee wishes to point out that Conventions Nos 1 and 30 allow the limit of eight hours a day and 48 hours a week to be exceeded only in very limited and clearly defined circumstances. For instance, Convention No. 1 prescribes an overall daily work limit of nine hours in the case of variable distribution of working hours within a week while Convention No. 30 provides that the maximum hours of work in the week may be so arranged that hours of work in any day do not exceed ten hours. Therefore, the "compressed work-week" arrangements (i.e. four consecutive 12-hour workdays followed by three days off) referred to in the comments of the CTA would seem to be incompatible with the requirements of the Convention. As the Committee has concluded in paragraph 213 of its General Survey of 2005 on hours of work, "it appears that in many cases compressed work-weeks are likely to be in contravention of the requirements of Convention No. 1, Convention No. 30, or both, in particular due to the number of daily hours which are typically worked under these arrangements". For example, compressed work-week arrangements, where work is performed by two teams in 12-hour shifts, would appear to be incompatible with the requirements of both Conventions Nos 1 and 30, because the daily work may exceed the nine-hour and ten-hour limits prescribed respectively. The Committee accordingly hopes that the Government will consider measures to ensure that working time arrangements fully comply with the limit set out in Article 4 of the Convention. In addition, the Committee would appreciate receiving additional information on the levels of over-employment ("sobreocupación horaria") and any measures taken or envisaged for the protection of the workers concerned.

Costa Rica

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1982)

Articles 2 and 6(1)(b) of the Convention. Hours of work and overtime of bus drivers. The Committee notes the information sent by the Government and by the National Chamber of Transport in reply to the previous comment it made with respect to observations submitted by the Rerum Novarum Workers' Confederation (CTRN) on the working hours of bus drivers. It notes that the Government refers to its 2011 report on this matter and reaffirms that the CTRN's allegations are incorrect, recalling that any infringement of the legislation in force would be examined by the labour inspection services, regardless of any legal action taken. It indicates that in 2011 the National Directorate of Labour Inspection undertook 138 inspections in transport enterprises. No infringements were reported in 18 enterprises, and 87 per cent of the other 120 enterprises applied the measures requested by the labour inspector. The Committee also notes that, according to comments made by the National Chamber of Transport, in addition to the information contained in its communication of 24 November 2010, the practice whereby the driver had to clean the bus without being paid for these hours of work has fallen into disuse because the modernization of transport has resulted in specialized staff having to do this job.

The Committee notes, however, that the CTRN renewed its allegations in a communication dated 30 August 2012, which included individual statements from bus drivers to the effect that they worked more than 12 hours on Sundays without being paid overtime. The CTRN also enclosed press cuttings referring to a strike organized by bus drivers employed by the company "Transportes Unidos la 400" in November 2011 to press their claims for sanitation facilities in bus depots, the payment of overtime, a lunch break and a stop to unofficial payments. According to this information, the strike was called off after an agreement had been reached to initiate negotiations on these matters with the participation of a representative from the Ministry of Labour and Social Security (MTSS). The Committee notes that, in a communication received on 22 November 2012, the Government indicated that it is conducting consultations with a view to submitting, the soonest possible, its reply to the comments of the CTRN. Hoping to receive this response very shortly, the Committee requests the Government to provide information, in particular, on the outcome of the negotiations conducted after the strike and on its impact on the working conditions of bus drivers employed by other companies. Furthermore, given that the CTRN's allegations seem serious and are backed up by testimonies of the workers concerned, the Committee asks the Government to take all the necessary measures in the immediate future to ascertain whether the provisions of the Convention are effectively enforced in practice in the case of bus drivers, and to provide detailed information on the outcome of these inquiries in its next report.

Equatorial Guinea

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 6 of the Convention. Permanent and temporary exceptions. In reply to the comments the Committee has been making since 1994, the Government indicated that the regulations applying section 49 of Act No. 2/1990 were still being examined with the parties concerned, particularly in the oil sector. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the progress made in this matter. The Government is also invited to communicate information on the organizations of employers and workers consulted in the preparation of the abovementioned regulations. Pending the latter's adoption, the Committee urges the Government to provide information on the manner in which effect is given, in practice, to the provisions of section 49 of Act No. 2/1990 on overtime.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 7 of the Convention. Permanent and temporary exceptions. In reply to comments that the Committee has been making since 1994, the Government indicated that the regulations to implement section 49 of Act No. 2/1990 are still being examined with the parties concerned, particularly in the oil sector. The Committee requests the Government to report on progress in this process. The Government is also asked to provide information on the employers' and workers' organizations consulted in the preparation of these regulations. Pending the latter's adoption, the Committee urges the Government to provide information on the way in which the provisions of section 49 of Act No. 2/1990 on overtime are applied in practice.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Georgia

Holidays with Pay Convention, 1936 (No. 52) (ratification: 1993)

Articles 2 and 6 of the Convention. Right to annual holidays with pay. The Committee notes that the Georgian Trade Union Confederation (GTUC), in a communication received on 21 September 2012, reiterates the observations that it made previously on the subject of the application of the Convention. The GTUC refers to the case of employees who work for years for the same employer on the basis of renewable one-month employment contracts and are thus never entitled to paid annual leave, in view of the fact that this entitlement takes effect after a period of service of 11 months. The Confederation adds that many employees are dismissed before being able to take their annual holiday with pay, without receiving any compensation from their employer for annual leave that was not taken, because of the absence of any legal provision giving effect to Article 6 of the Convention. Finally, the GTUC criticizes the Government's policy aimed at totally deregulating the labour market and abolishing most labour market institutions, including the labour inspectorate.

The Committee notes that, in reply to its previous observation, the Government indicates that the statements by the GTUC relating to employees working on the basis of renewable one-month contracts are not backed up by statistics or any other evidence. The Government indicates that, in accordance with section 22(1) of the Labour Code, employees are entitled to paid annual leave after a period of service of 11 months, but that leave may be granted before expiry of this deadline subject to an agreement between the parties. It adds that an employment contract may establish terms other than those provided for by the Labour Code with respect to holiday entitlement, provided that such provisions are not less favourable to workers.

The Committee observes that, contrary to the Labour Code of 1973 as amended, the Labour Code of 2006 does not contain any provisions giving effect to Article 6 of the Convention, according to which workers dismissed for reasons imputable to their employer, before they have taken holidays due to them, shall receive in respect of every day of holiday due to them under the Convention, the remuneration established for each such day. The Committee therefore asks the Government to adopt the necessary provisions to ensure the application of the Convention on this point.

As regards the allegation made by the GTUC that workers are employed for years on one-month contracts, thereby depriving them of the entitlement to an annual holiday with pay, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that this matter comes within the scope of the supervision of the application of the Convention by the competent national authorities. However, the Committee notes that, under section 55 of the Labour Code of 2006, the Ordinance of 16 November 2004 approving the charter of the labour inspectorate has been repealed, and it understands that the latter has not been replaced since then by any other authority responsible for the enforcement of the labour legislation. The Committee hopes that the Government will take steps as soon as possible to restore the operation of the labour inspectorate, so as to ensure the effective enforcement of the labour legislation, including with respect to holidays with pay.

Guatemala

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1988)

Articles 2 and 6 of the Convention. Work in excess of normal hours of work – Overtime hours. The Committee notes the observations made by the Trade Union of Plant and Well Operators and Guards of the Municipal Water Company and Allied Workers (SITOPGEMA), made in a communication received on 2 October 2012 and transmitted to the Government on 12 October 2012, concerning the application of the Convention. It notes that these observations follow up on those previously made by SITOPGEMA concerning the situation of workers at the Municipal Water Company of Guatemala City (EMPAGUA), who alternate work periods of 24 consecutive hours with rest periods of 48 consecutive hours without being paid for the overtime that they work. SITOPGEMA points out that decision No. 1088-2004-561 of 16 April 2008 of the labour and social insurance tribunal, which rejected the demand made by the workers concerned and to which the Committee referred in its observation of 2008, has since been overturned by the appeal court and the other courts concerned, and so the right of these workers to be paid for the overtime worked is thus recognized definitively. However, the union adds that new procedures for implementing this decision and calculating the exact amounts owed are being examined in the national courts and consequently the demand first put forward by SITOPGEMA more than ten years ago has still not been settled. The Committee requests the Government to provide any comments that it wishes to make in response to the observations made by SITOPGEMA and to reply in detail to its observation of 2009.

The Committee also notes the observations made by the Indigenous and Rural Workers' Trade Union Movement of Guatemala (MSICG), in a communication received on 10 September 2012 and transmitted to the Government on 28 September 2012, which refer to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), but also have some relevance with regard to the application of Convention No. 1. The MSICG states, in particular, that textile industry employees in the maquila (export processing) sector are obliged to work more than 12 hours a day, without the labour inspection services taking any steps to prevent employers from imposing working days whose length exceeds legal limits. The Committee requests the Government to provide any comments it wishes to make in reply to the observations of the MSICG.

Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30) (ratification: 1961)

Articles 2 and 6 of the Convention. Exceeding normal hours of work – Overtime. The Committee notes the observations made by the Indigenous and Rural Workers' Trade Union Movement of Guatemala (MSICG) in a communication received on 10 September 2012 and transmitted to the Government on 28 September 2012. The MSICG's allegations specifically concern: the excessive working hours imposed on the staff of the Public Prosecutor's Office for Children and Young People following the introduction of a missing child warning system; working time regulations pertaining to the employees of the Guatemalan Social Security Institute and the Institute of Public Criminal Defence; and the obligation on employees in some municipalities to do unpaid overtime for work of a political nature for the mayors of these communities. The Committee requests the Government to provide any comments it may wish to make in reply to the observations of the MSICG.

Nicaragua

Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30) (ratification: 1934)

Articles 3 and 11 of the Convention. Limits on daily and weekly hours of work – Adequate inspection. The Committee notes the Government's reply to the comments made by the Trade Union Unification Confederation (CUS) alleging extensive practices of workers being obliged to perform additional hours of work without remuneration and also denouncing the Government's failure to monitor or control working time violations. In its response, the Government indicates that whenever workers are found to work in excess of the normal eight-hour daily limit, labour inspection services are instructed to verify that any additional hours of work are performed on a voluntary basis, that extra hours are fully paid at the overtime rate, and that any infringement of the relevant provisions of the Labour Code is properly sanctioned in accordance with the Labour Inspection Act No. 664 of 2008. The Government also refers to the Technical Guide on Inspection (Ministerial Agreement JCHG-003-08) that establishes a checklist to facilitate inspectors in ensuring compliance with the labour legislation, especially as regards hours of work and payment of wages. While noting these explanations, the Committee asks the Government to provide more detailed information on: (i) inspection results – including any relevant statistics – showing the number and nature of infringements of the working time legislation and the sanctions imposed; and (ii) any studies or inquiries undertaken in “call centres”, in response to the allegations that workers are constrained to work more than eight hours a day without being paid overtime in exchange of employment stability, and the results obtained.

In addition, the Committee notes the Government’s reference to the situation of an enterprise established in an export processing zone which operates a compressed working time arrangement of four consecutive 12-hour working days followed by four consecutive days of rest. The Government has concluded that such arrangement was irregular and requested remedial action but the enterprise concerned has challenged the Government’s decision as unconstitutional before the Supreme Court. The Committee wishes to refer, in this regard, to paragraphs 207–213 of its 2005 General Survey on hours of work in which it took the view that special attention would have to be paid to ensure that the implementation of compressed work-week arrangements complies with standards prescribed by Convention No. 30 and also that in order to be compatible with Convention No. 30, compressed work-weeks in commerce and offices should ensure that the daily working day does not exceed ten hours, as required under Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any further developments in this regard and to transmit a copy of the Supreme Court decision once it is published. Finally, the Committee would appreciate receiving the Government’s response to the points raised in an earlier comment concerning the application of Article 7(1) (persons who carry out types of work that are intermittent or which require only their physical presence) and Article 7(2) (additional hours performed by workers to repair errors attributable to them).

Romania

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1921)

Article 6(2) of the Convention. Overtime pay. The Committee notes the observations made by the National Trade Union Confederation (CNS “Cartel ALFA”) in a communication received on 30 August 2012. CNS “Cartel ALFA” indicates that the Government’s report does not reply to the Committee’s previous comments and states that the Government has not taken any measures to ensure that overtime is paid at a rate at least 25 per cent higher than the normal rate, even in cases where the worker concerned is granted compensatory rest. The Committee notes that the Government, in its reply received on 25 October 2012, refers only to the provisions of Emergency Ordinance No. 80/2010 supplementing Emergency Ordinance No. 37/2008 regulating certain financial matters in the budgetary sphere, which it understands are applicable only to the public sector. It further notes the Government’s indications that, pursuant to Emergency Ordinance No. 80/2010, overtime worked by managerial staff is compensated for only in terms of free time. The Committee further notes that the Government, in its report on the application of the Convention, merely summarizes the relevant provisions of the Labour Code, without indicating its intention to amend them in order to ensure their conformity with the Convention. It recalls that, in its direct request of 2008, it asked the Government to take measures to ensure the higher rate of pay for overtime in all cases, whether or not compensatory rest is granted. The Committee also emphasized that the Labour Code does not stipulate the number of overtime hours which are authorized, as required by this Article of the Convention. The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures without delay to bring the national legislation into conformity with Article 6(2) of the Convention and requests it to keep the Office informed of any further developments in this matter.

Articles 2 to 5 and 6(1). Daily hours of work – Unequal distribution of weekly hours of work – Cases in which overtime is authorized. The Committee recalls that, in its observation of 2011, it pointed out that the adoption of Act No. 40/2011 of 31 March 2011 amending the Labour Code did not reply to the comments made in its direct request of 2008 regarding the application of these provisions of the Convention. These comments were concerned in particular with section 115 of the Labour Code (former section 112), which allows daily hours of work to be increased to 12 hours and regarding which the Committee emphasized that the daily limit of eight hours established by the Convention may only be exceeded in the specific cases referred to in Articles 3 to 6 of the Convention. The Committee also referred to section 113(2) (former section 110(2)) of the Labour Code which, combined with the national collective agreement, allows the unequal distribution of weekly hours of work, increasing daily working time to a maximum of ten hours on certain days. The Committee drew the Government’s attention to the fact that Article 2(b) of the Convention only authorizes the unequal distribution of weekly hours of work if daily working time does not exceed nine hours. Finally, the direct request referred to section 120(2) of the Labour Code (former section 117), which does not provide a restrictive list of the situations in which overtime may be worked, except for cases of force majeure or work that needs to be done urgently. The Committee recalled that, except for the two abovementioned cases, Article 6(1)(b) of the Convention only authorizes overtime work to enable the employer to deal with exceptional cases of pressure of work. The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary steps as soon as possible to ensure the implementation of these provisions of the Convention and to inform the Office of any decisions taken in this regard.

Sierra Leone

Holidays with Pay (Agriculture) Convention, 1952 (No. 101) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 8 of the Convention. Right to annual holidays with pay. The Committee notes the statement in the Government's last report that section 63(6) of the draft Employment Act would provide that any agreement to relinquish the right to minimum annual holiday would be null and void. The Committee hopes that the Act will be adopted in the near future, bringing section 12(a) of Government Notice No. 888, which the Committee has repeatedly highlighted as being in need of amendment, into conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the full text of the revised legislation as soon as it is adopted.

The Committee also takes this opportunity to recall that, on proposal of the Working Party on Policy regarding the Revision of Standards, the ILO Governing Body has decided that Convention No. 101 is outdated and has invited States parties to that Convention to contemplate ratifying the Holidays with Pay Convention (Revised), 1970 (No. 132), which is not deemed to be fully up to date but remains relevant in certain respects (see GB.283/LILS/WP/PRS/1/2, paragraph 12). Acceptance of the obligations of Convention No. 132 in respect of persons employed in agriculture by a State party to Convention No. 101 involves the immediate denunciation of the latter. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decision it may take in this respect.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Slovakia

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1993)

Article 6(1)(b) of the Convention. Temporary exceptions – Overtime. The Committee notes the comments of the Trade Union Confederation of the Slovak Republic (KOZ SR) dated 26 August 2011 concerning the amendments to the Labour Code which were approved by Act No. 257 of 13 July 2011 and entered into force on 1 September 2011. The KOZ SR expresses its concern over section 97(10) of the Labour Code, as amended, which increases the maximum limit of authorized overtime work to 400 hours per year (550 hours for managers). According to the KOZ SR, this new provision allows for a broad and arbitrary interpretation of the concept of manager, conflicts with the requirement of reconciliation of work and family responsibilities and has adverse effects on employment.

In its reply, the Government argues, firstly, that under Article 2 of the Convention, managers are excluded from its scope and, therefore, the comments of the KOZ SR are without merit on this point. Secondly, as regards the maximum annual limit of 400 hours of overtime for employees, the Government states that this limit represents an average of approximately eight hours of overtime per week (i.e. 400 hours divided by 52 weeks) which, even if added to the statutory 40-hour week, still does not exceed the 48-hour weekly limit prescribed by the Convention. The Government adds that, pursuant to section 97(5) of the Labour Code, an employer may only require overtime in cases of temporary and urgent increases in work demand or when public interest is concerned.

While noting the Government's explanations, the Committee observes that section 97(10) of the amended Labour Code does not require that the 400-hour annual limit of overtime be divided into 52 equal weekly periods and, therefore, there is nothing in the Code to prevent the possibility of employees being asked to perform excessive overtime hours in certain periods of the year. In this connection, the Committee is obliged to recall that the limits to overtime, while not specifically prescribed in the Convention, must be reasonable and must be in line with the general goal of the instruments to establish the eight-hour day and 48-hour week as a legal standard of hours of work. The Committee therefore concludes that section 97(10) of the Labour Code authorizes overtime within limits that go well beyond those contemplated in the Convention and potentially pose serious problems to workers' health and well-being. In addition, the Committee notes that section 97(10) provides for overtime where the public interest would so require, which clearly leaves room for much broader exceptions than the exceptional cases of pressure of work provided for in Article 6(1)(b) of the Convention. The Committee accordingly asks the Government to review the provisions of the Labour Code on overtime in order to ensure that they are in full conformity with the letter and the spirit of the Convention. The Committee also asks the Government to reply in detail to the other important points it has raised in a direct request, formulated in 2008, with regard to the application of Articles 5 (averaging of hours of work) and 6 (daily working time limit in case of overtime and overtime pay).

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 1 (Comoros, Equatorial Guinea, Iraq); Convention No. 14 (Burundi, Iraq, Ireland, United Kingdom: British Virgin Islands, United Kingdom: St Helena); Convention No. 30 (Equatorial Guinea, Iraq); Convention No. 47 (Ukraine, Uzbekistan); Convention No. 52 (Burundi, Uzbekistan); Convention No. 89 (Burundi, Guinea, Iraq, United Arab Emirates); Convention No. 101 (Burundi, Djibouti); Convention No. 106 (Djibouti, Iraq, Tajikistan); Convention No. 132 (Guinea, Iraq); Convention No. 153 (Iraq); Convention No. 175 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Guyana).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following State in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 132 (Ireland).

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

With reference to its previous comments the Committee notes, with concern, that in its most recent report, the Government makes no reference to the process to revise Act No. 88-07 of 26 January 1988 and to adopt implementing regulations to ensure compliance with the Convention – a process that the Government has reported on for the past 20 years. It recalls that the Government in its previous report specifically referred to a draft executive decree that would reflect all the relevant provisions of the Convention, as well as those of the Recommendation. Recalling the constitutional obligations of the Government to implement the provisions of Conventions it has ratified, the Committee urges the Government to adopt the draft executive decree referred to above without delay so as to give effect to the various provisions of the Convention and to report to the Committee on any progress in this respect.

In the meantime, the Committee is bound to recall the following points:

Article 2(3) and (4) of the Convention. The Committee recalls that section 8 of Act 88-07 of 26 January 1988 which prohibits the manufacture, exhibition, putting up for sale, sale, import, hire or transfer in any other manner of machinery or parts of machinery that do not correspond to current national and international health and safety standards does not determine the machinery that is considered to be dangerous, nor the parts thereof which are likely to present danger, in accordance with the requirements of Article 2(3) and (4) of the Convention. It recalls that it had noted that the provisions of Executive Decree No. 90-245 of 18 August 1990, applicable to gas pressure machinery and of Executive Decree No. 90-246 of 18 August 1990, applicable to steam pressure machinery, met the requirements of Article 2 of the Convention, but that similar measures of general application to machinery covered by the Convention as a whole were needed. In this regard the Committee wishes to reiterate its previous comments that the objective of Article 2 of the Convention is to guarantee that machines are safe before they reach the user, whereas the provisions of Executive Decree No. 91-05 of 19 January 1991 respecting general safety provisions concerning the guarding of machinery once it is in use.

The Committee again draws the attention of the Government to paragraphs 73, et seq., of its General Survey of 1987 on safety and the working environment, where it indicates that it is essential for the effective application of Part [I] of the Convention that national legislation designate those parts of machinery that present danger and require appropriate guarding (paragraph 82), and that, until there has been a determination of the machinery and parts thereof that present danger, the prohibition of the sale, hire, transfer in any other manner and exhibition of machinery contained in Article 2 of the Convention remains ineffective. The Committee recalls its previous reference to paragraph 85 of the 1987 General Survey, op. cit., to indicate that the definition of dangerous machinery and parts thereof should as a minimum cover all those parts enumerated in Article 2 of the Convention.

Article 4. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's reply that the responsibility referred to in paragraph 2 of the Committee's previous comments was provided for in section 37 of Act No. 88-07 of 26 January 1988, which prescribed sanctions in cases of violations of sections 8, 10 and 34 of the same Act. The Committee recalls once again that, while section 8 of Act No. 88-07 prohibits the manufacture, exhibition, putting up for sale, sale, import, hire or transfer in any other manner of machinery that is dangerous, with a view to its use, section 10 of the same Act explicitly lays down the responsibilities only of those who are involved in the manufacture, import, cession and use of the machinery (manufacturer and importer) and not of the vendor, the person letting out on hire or transferring the machinery in any other manner, or the exhibitor, and their respective agents. The Committee once again refers to paragraphs 164–175 of its 1987 General Survey, op. cit., in which it observes that the general prohibition from manufacturing, selling, hiring or transferring in any other manner machinery which is dangerous is inadequate if it is not accompanied by a provision explicitly requiring these provisions to be applied to the manufacturer, vendor, the person letting out on hire or transferring the machinery in any other manner or their respective agents, in order to comply with Article 4 of the Convention which expressly establishes the responsibility of these persons, and to avoid any ambiguity. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the responsibility of the categories of persons mentioned in Article 4 is explicitly established in national legislation and that sanctions are applicable in the event of the violation of these provisions.

Articles 6 and 7. Further to its previous comments concerning the responsibility of the employer, the Committee notes the Government's indication that this responsibility is established in section 38 of Act No. 88-07. The Committee notes that the provisions of Act No. 88-07, including section 38, do not fully respond to its previous comments that the use of machinery, any parts of which, including the point of operation, is without appropriate guards, is not explicitly prohibited in law. It reiterates its previous indications that sections 40–43 of Executive Decree No. 91-05, while requiring the dangerous parts of machines to be guarded, do not explicitly prohibit the use of machinery, the dangerous parts of which are not guarded. The Committee refers once again to paragraph 180 of its 1987 General Survey, op. cit., in which it indicates that Article 6(1) of the Convention is formulated as a general prohibition to be included in the national legislation and that, in order to observe this provision, it is not enough to require the guarding of machines while in use, without at the same time requiring that the use of machines without appropriate guards is forbidden. The Committee wishes to reiterate the need for the legislation to establish clearly that the obligation to ensure compliance with this prohibition rests on the employer, in accordance with Article 7 of the Convention.

Hygiene (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1964 (No. 120) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. The Committee also notes that the Government report submitted in 2011 did not contain replies to the questions raised in its previous comments and did not indicate the measures taken, in law and in practice, to ensure the application of Articles 14 and 18 of the Convention. It must therefore once again repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 14 of the Convention. Suitable seats for workers. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that labour legislation is currently being reviewed, and that the obligation to provide suitable and sufficient seats for workers has been taken into consideration in the provisions of the future Labour Code. The Committee once again requests the Government to adopt, as soon as possible, appropriate measures in law and practice to ensure that all workers covered by the Convention have sufficient and suitable seats, and the possibility of using them, and to keep the Office informed of any progress achieved in this respect.

Article 18. Protection against noise and vibrations. The Committee notes the reference by the Government to sections 15 and 16 of Executive Decree No. 91/05 of 19 January 1991 which states the obligations of employers to reduce the impact of noise on workers' health, and where this is not possible, to provide such workers with personal protective equipment. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government adopt, as soon as possible, appropriate measures in law and practice to give effect to the provisions of this Article with regards to vibrations, and to keep the Office informed of any progress achieved in this respect.

Part IV of the report form. Application in practice. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government reference to the body in charge of the enforcement of the Convention, the Labour State Inspectorate. However, the information provided does not allow for a general appreciation of the manner in which the Convention is applied to the country. The Committee accordingly once again requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, for example by supplying extracts from inspection reports and, where such information exists, the number of workers covered by the legislation; the number and nature of the contraventions reported; and the number, nature and cause of accidents reported.

The Committee takes this opportunity to invite the Government to request ILO technical assistance with the view to ensure an effective application of the Convention. The Committee hopes that such technical assistance can be carried out and asks the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this respect with the relevant ILO bodies.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Australia

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2004)

Legislation. The Committee notes that Safe Work Australia is the national policy body responsible for the development and evaluation of the model work health and safety (WHS) laws. The model WHS laws are the basis for harmonized laws across Australia, and must be passed by Parliament in each jurisdiction to become legally binding. The model WHS laws consist of the the Model WHS Act, supported by model WHS regulations, model Codes of Practice and a National Compliance and Enforcement Policy. The Committee notes that all jurisdictions have committed to adopting the model WHS legislation, with minor variations as necessary to ensure it is consistent with relevant drafting protocols and other laws and processes operating within the jurisdiction. The Government indicates that full text copies of all federal and some State legislation can be obtained at <http://www.austrlii.edu.au>. The Committee notes with satisfaction that on 1 January 2012, the model WHS laws commenced in the Commonwealth, New South Wales, Queensland, the Northern Territory and the Australian Capital Territory, and will commence in Tasmania on 1 January 2013. In addition, the Committee notes from publically available sources that the WHS Bill was passed by both houses of the South Australian Parliament on 1 November 2012, and will enter into force on 1 January 2013. The Government indicates that Western Australia and Victoria are yet to implement the model WHS framework. The Committee welcomes the commitment by the Council of Australian Governments to review the harmonized WHS laws by the end of 2014.

The Committee also notes the communication by the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) received on 31 August 2012, and transmitted to the Government on 14 September 2012. The ACTU alleges that the key barriers to the passage of the relevant legislation in Western Australia and Victoria is the fact that they improve rights for workers. The ACTU urges the relevant state governments to secure the passage of the model WHS legislation as soon as possible. The Committee hopes that the model WHS laws will be adopted by the remaining states as soon as is practicable.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Barbados

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Comments by the Barbados Workers Union (BWU). The Committee notes the comments transmitted by the BWU on 1 September 2011 which were communicated to the Government on 19 September 2011 and that no response thereto has been received from the Government. The Committee notes that the BWU reiterates its call to institute its previously suggested measures so as to mitigate the probability and severity of any incidents relative to radiation exposure, that the BWU on several occasions has requested that the Advisory Committee be reactivated, maximum admissible radiation exposure doses be fixed and a compulsory annual examination be instituted, among other measures and that according to the BWU workers in a number of establishments have, of late, made calls for the aforementioned measures relating to radiation protection to be implemented without delay. In the light of these comments, the Committee requests the Government to take all appropriate measures to ensure full application of the Convention. It also reiterates its request to the Government to respond to its previous observations which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report and the reply to its direct request. It notes that, despite comments it has reiterated for several years, the Government's report contains no new information and that, according to the Government's replies, no follow-up has been given to the Committee's comments. The Committee also notes that the Government's report refers to observations submitted by the "Barbados Workers' Union" which requests the Government to reactivate the Advisory Committee on Radiation Protection (ACRP); to establish legislative measures to afford protection to workers exposed to ionizing radiation, particularly by fixing the maximum admissible radiation exposure doses; to take appropriate measures to prescribe a compulsory medical examination – not merely optional – for workers exposed to radiation; and to provide alternative employment allowing them to maintain their income for persons who can no longer work in zones exposed to radiation. In view of the above, the Committee is bound to reiterate its observations on the following matters.

Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention. The Committee noted the Government's indication that the regulatory body to monitor the exposure of workers to ionizing radiation has not been established yet. It further notes that the ACRP has not yet given directives regarding protective measures to be taken against ionizing radiation, or time limits for the application of such measures. Referring to its introductory comments, the Committee urges the Government to take the appropriate steps to make the ACRP operational and thus creating the framework for the monitoring of workers' exposure to ionizing radiation and the issuing of directives regarding protective measures, which falls, according to the Committee's understanding, in the area of competence of the ACRP.

Articles 3 and 6. With regard to the fixing of maximum permissible doses of ionizing radiation, necessary in order to comply with the requirement to ensure effective protection of workers in the light of "knowledge available at the time" and in the light of "current knowledge", the Committee noted from the Government's report that the radiation protection officer, being a hospital physician and the chairperson of the ACRP, is well aware of the recent revised dose limits of the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP). In this regard, the Government indicates that reports on the doses of ionizing radiation received by workers show that the limits recommended by the ICRP were not exceeded. However, in particular cases recorded for cardiac catheterization doctors and one radiologist, the dose of radiation absorbed was beyond this limitation, which subsequently has been brought to their attention. The Committee, noting that the observance of the dose limits for ionizing radiation, as recommended by the ICRP in 1990, do not seem to set a problem to the Government in practice, requests therefore the Government to reconsider the possibility to fix maximum permissible dose levels of ionizing radiations with legally binding effect in order to guarantee by means of enforceable provisions an effective protection of workers exposed to ionizing radiations, in accordance with Articles 3 and 6 of the Convention.

Article 5. With regard to the installation of a computerized system, type "Selectron HDR", in 1990 which reduces the number of workers dealing with radiation sources to an extent that the probable exposure to radiation would turn to zero, the Committee noted the Government's indication that this system is used in the treatment of cancer of the uterine cervix and related problems. However, its use in other medical disciplines has to be planned since logistical problems regarding the necessary equipment and the movement of staff working in related disciplines need to be resolved. The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary action to enable the use of the "Selectron HDR" system in all medical disciplines where appropriate in order to restrict the exposure of workers to the lowest practicable level and to avoid any unnecessary exposure of workers. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on experiences already collected in applying the system in the field of the treatment of cancer of the uterine cervix.

Article 7. The Committee noted the Government's indication that no legislation is in place to set a lower limit on the age of radiation workers. However, since it is a very fundamental issue, it is hoped that it will appear in the amended Radiation Act. In the meantime it belongs to the radiation protection officer's tasks to ensure that adequate structural shielding in place is provided, such as area monitoring, warning lights or alarm where appropriate and that only qualified workers are employed to operate machines producing radiation. In this respect, the Committee notes again the Government's indication provided with its 1998 report to the effect that the minimum age for engagement in radiation work was 16. Recalling the provision of Article 7(2) of the Convention which provides for a minimum age of 16 to become engaged in work involving ionizing radiation, the Committee requests again the Government to specify the legal basis providing for the prohibition to engage young persons under 16 years of age in work involving exposure to ionizing radiations. Moreover, the Committee recalls the provision of Article 7(1)(a) of the Convention, providing for the fixation of appropriate levels of exposure to ionizing radiations for workers who are directly engaged in radiation work and are aged 18 and over. The Committee therefore asks the Government once again to indicate the measures taken or contemplated in order to fix appropriate levels for this group of workers. Since the Committee understands from the Government's indication that an amendment of the Radiation Act is intended, it would invite the Government to consider the possibility to incorporate such appropriate levels in the amendment of the above Act.

Article 8. With regard to dose limits to be set for workers not directly engaged in radiation work, the Government indicated that the reports on radiation received by these workers show either negligible or zero doses. While the Committee noted this information with interest, it nevertheless wishes to point out that Article 8 of the Convention obliges every ratifying State to fix appropriate levels of exposure to ionizing radiations for this category of workers, in accordance with Article 6, read together with Article 3(1) of the Convention, that is in the light of knowledge available at the time. In this respect, the Committee would draw the Government's attention to paragraph 14 of its 1992 general observation under the Convention, as well as to section 5.4.5 of the ILO Code of Practice on the Radiation Protection of Workers (ionizing radiations) of 1986, explaining that the employer has the same obligations towards workers not engaged in radiation work, as far as restricting their radiation exposure is concerned, as if they were members of the public with respect to sources of practices under the employer's control. The annual dose limits should be those applied to individual members of the public. According to the 1990 ICRP Recommendations, the annual dose limit for members of the public is 1 mSv. The Committee therefore asks the Government to indicate the measures envisaged to fulfil its obligation under this Article of the Convention.

Article 9. The Committee noted the information supplied with the Government's report on the functions of the alarm systems used in those units at hospitals where radiation treatment is carried out. It also notes the existence of appropriate warning signs fixed on the doors to indicate the presence of hazards arising from ionizing radiations. However, with regard to adequate instructions of workers directly engaged in radiation work, the Committee calls again the Government's attention to section 2.4 of the 1986 ILO Code of Practice on the Radiation Protection of Workers (ionizing radiations) which contains general principles for informing, instructing and training of workers. The Government is requested to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that workers are adequately instructed in the precautions to be taken for their protection in conformity with Article 9(2) of the Convention.

Article 11. The Committee noted the Government's indication to the effect that the workers designated to perform radiation work are presently monitored by TLD radiation monitoring badges supplied by the universities of the West Indies. The Committee requests the Government to explain more in detail the characteristics of this specific monitoring and the manner in which it is carried out.

Article 12. With regard to appropriate medical examination of workers directly engaged in radiation work, the Government indicated that a medical examination is still a prerequisite for an appointment to the public service. In addition, all workers assuming duties at the hospital are tested subsequently after they have taken up their work on a voluntary basis. In this respect, the Committee wishes to underline that subsequent medical examinations of workers directly engaged in radiation work have to be carried out on a mandatory basis and thus cannot be left to the discretion of the workers concerned whether or not they want to undergo a medical examination once they have been employed. The Government is accordingly requested to indicate the measures taken or envisaged ensuring that all workers engaged in radiation work are obliged to undergo appropriate medical examinations, not only prior to their employment, but also subsequently at appropriate intervals.

Article 13. With regard to the measures to be taken in emergency situations, the Government indicated that no such measures are in place yet, but that it is hoped that the development of emergency plans will be one of the tasks of the proposed regulatory body. In this respect, the Committee states that the ACRP is responsible, inter alia, to prepare a detailed radiation protection programme for Barbados (point (3) of the Advisory Committee on Radiation Protection – Terms of reference). The Committee thinks that the preparation of measures to be taken in emergency situations would form an integral part of its task. The Committee therefore hopes that the ACRP will resume its functions in the near future and that it will, within the framework of its duties, elaborate plans for emergency situations. To this effect, the Committee invites the Government again to refer to its 1987 general observation under the Convention as well as to paragraphs 16–27 of its 1992 general observation under the Convention concerning occupational exposure during and after an emergency which intend to give guidance regarding the measures to be taken in emergency situations. The Committee hopes that the Government will report on any progress made in this respect.

Article 14. In absence of any additional information regarding alternative employment of workers with premature accumulation of their lifetime dose, the Committee requests once again the Government to indicate whether and, if so, under which provisions, it is ensured that a worker who is medically advised to avoid exposure to ionizing radiations is not assigned to work involving such exposure, or is transferred to another suitable employment if he or she has already been assigned.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Burkina Faso

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161) (ratification: 1997)

Legislation. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of the new Labour Code, Act No. 028/2008/AN of 13 May 2008 (Labour Code), including in particular its Part 3 Occupational Health Services, which gives partial effect to the Articles of the Convention. It also notes the adoption of Decree No. 20112-928/PRES/PM/MFPTSS of 21 November 2011 on general measures concerning protection, prevention and safety applicable to all enterprises. The Committee also notes the information that additional implementing legislation is being drafted, including, in particular, regulations implementing sections 262 and 264 of the Labour Code, and regulations on the following subjects: procedures for the establishment of occupational safety and health services across enterprises; functions of the health personnel within occupational safety and health services; equipment and procurement of supplies of prime importance for occupational safety and health services; and models for registers for use by the occupational safety and health services (daily consultation logs and registers concerning occupational accidents and diseases).

Articles 1, 5 and 9 of the Convention. Functions and multidisciplinary nature of the occupational health services. The Committee notes the referenced provisions in sections 255–263 and that according to section 263 further implementing legislation is foreseen. It notes that section 256 provides that the occupational health services is charged with the prevention of occupational risks, and that the functions the occupational health services are required to fulfil according to section 257 include the functions referred to in Article 5(b), (f), (g), (i) and (j), but that it is not quite clear, however, how effect is given to its Article 5(a), (c), (d), (e), (h) and (k). In particular, the Committee notes that contrary to section 256, section 257 does not refer to the preventive aspects of the occupational health services including those related to the identification and assessment of the risks from health hazards in the workplace. In this context, the Committee would also like to emphasize the provisions in Article 9 which require that, in accordance with national law and practice, the occupational health services should be multidisciplinary. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the effect given or envisaged to be given to Article 5(a), (c), (d), (e), (h) and (k) and, as appropriate, to take due account of the terms of Articles 1 and 5 in the context of further development of legislation related to occupational health services.

Article 2. Implementation and periodical review of a coherent national policy on occupational health services. The Committee notes the information in the Government's report, according to which the national occupational safety and health policy has been integrated in a national labour policy. In the absence of a copy of the policy adopted, the Committee cannot fully determine whether the action taken constitutes compliance with this Article of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to submit a copy of the national occupational safety and health policy which it hopes contains a policy specifically addressing the subject matters of the present Convention, including a mechanism to ensure its implementation and periodical review in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers.

Article 9(2). Collaboration between the occupational health services and other services within the enterprise. Article 10. Professional independence of the personnel providing occupational health services. Article 11. Qualifications required for the personnel providing occupational health services. Article 15. Information to be provided to the occupational health services regarding absences due to ill health. The Committee notes that the referenced provisions in the Labour Code do not appear to give effect to the provisions of these Articles. The Government is requested to provide further information on the measures taken or envisaged to give effect to Articles 9(2), 10, 11, and 15 of the Convention.

Part VI of the report form. Application in practice and requests for technical assistance. The Committee notes the information that the Government would like to benefit from technical assistance in the following four areas: (a) the promotion and the setting up of occupational health services; (b) training of a sufficient number of occupational medical doctors and nurses to ensure the provision of adequate assistance to the occupational health services; (c) training for the specialization of labour inspectors on matters related to occupational safety and health and in the area of international labour standards. The Committee hopes that relevant technical assistance can be carried out and asks the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this respect with the Office. The Committee again requests the Government to provide information concerning the practical application of the Convention in order to follow the progress made.

Burundi

Safety Provisions (Building) Convention, 1937 (No. 62) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee notes the comments made by the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU) in a communication received on 31 August 2012, which was forwarded to the Government on 18 September 2012, indicating that many public services, in the private sector, do not have occupational safety and health services.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report and the statistical data. It notes with regret that, despite the comments it has been making for a number of years, the legislation to apply the Convention has not been changed.

Article 4 of the Convention. Inspection system. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes from the information provided that the Government will explore possibilities for training labour inspectors to monitor safety prescriptions in the building sector. The Government nevertheless points out in its report that managers in charge of occupational risk prevention at the National Social Security Institute (INSS) are qualified to carry out inspections in the building sector and that they give useful instructions to the employers concerned. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the practical application of this provision of the Convention.

Articles 6–15. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, the legislation governing occupational safety has not been repealed and that Rwanda-Urundi (ORU) Ordinance No. 21/94 of 24 July 1953 establishing the legal framework for occupational safety in the building industry has not been revoked, and that the Government is envisaging its re-dissemination. The Committee requests the Government to provide clarification on the legislation in force to enable it to assess how the Convention is applied in Burundi.

Part V of the report form. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the statistical data in the Government's report showing trends in the number of active workers and the numbers receiving occupational risk benefits between 2000 and 2004, and the distribution of enterprises according to size and branch of economic activity at 31 December 2004. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information in its next report regarding trends in accidents in the building industry, together with any other relevant information allowing the Committee to assess how the safety standards established in the Convention are applied in practice.

Revision of the Convention. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167), which revises Convention No. 62 of 1937 and could well be better adapted to the current situation in the building sector. It again points out that the ILO Governing Body invited States parties to Convention No. 62 to envisage the ratification of Convention No. 167, which entails, ipso jure, immediate denunciation of Convention No. 62 (GB.268/8/2). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any action taken on this suggestion.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Canada

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1988)

The Committee notes the information that the Canada Consumer Product Safety Act (CCPSA) entered into force on 20 June 2011, but that, substantively, there has been no change in how the Convention is applied in legislation as the workplace hazardous materials information system (Part II of the Hazardous Products Act), the Asbestos Products Regulations (APR) as well as previous prohibitions made thereunder remain in force, with minor amendments made to the APR in order to make them consistent with the new CCPSA regime. The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government that in the province of Newfoundland and Labrador, the Workplace Health, Safety and Compensation Commission and the Occupational Health and Safety Branch of Service Newfoundland and Labrador released the 2011–13 Strategy for prevention for Known Occupational Diseases, developed in consultation with the social partners, which provides a framework for educating and raising awareness about all known occupational diseases in Newfoundland and Labrador. It is a broad-based strategy aimed at reducing the burden and incidence of occupational disease in the province including asbestosis and mesothelioma. The Nova Scotia Department of Labour and Advanced Education has established an employer/employee advisory committee that provides advice to the Minister on occupational health and safety matters including matters related to asbestos in workplaces.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference 100th Session, June 2011)

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Measures to be taken for the prevention and control of health hazards due to occupational exposure to asbestos and periodical review in the light of technical progress and scientific knowledge. Article 4. Consultations with the most representative organizations of employers and workers. Article 10. Replacement of asbestos and total or partial prohibition of the use of asbestos. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government and received on 30 August 2012 that, since November 2011, there has been no asbestos production in Canada. Against the background of the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011) after the discussion of this case, the Committee welcomes this information which it deems to be of great significance. It notes, however, that the report contains no further information in these respects. The Committee further notes the information that consultations regarding the current federal review of Part X of the Canada Occupational Health and Safety Regulations on Hazardous Substances, referenced in Canada's previous report, continues to be conducted by a tripartite working group, including representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress. With reference to the foregoing, its previous comments, and the provisions in Article 3(2) and 10, the Committee requests the Government to provide further information on asbestos production in Canada, including on whether the currently halted asbestos production is a temporary or permanent measure and whether it is a result of a formal decision to halt production. It also requests the Government to provide further information on the outcome of any relevant legislative reviews, including on the review of Part X of the Canada Occupational Health and Safety Regulations on Hazardous Substances.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Chile

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes the comments of the Trade Union Federation of Supervisors (ROL A) and Professionals CODELCO (the National Copper Corporation) Chile (FESUC), received on 14 June 2012 and forwarded to the Government on 22 June 2012. The Committee also notes the Government's report received on 11 September 2012, which does not contain observations on the FESUC's comments.

Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention. Formulation, implementation and periodic review, in consultation with the social partners, of a coherent national policy on occupational health services. Consultation with organizations of employers and workers on the measures to be taken to give effect to the Convention. In its comments, the FESUC indicates that Act No. 16744 authorizes employers to administer occupational accident and disease insurance either through external bodies (employers' mutual associations) or through an internal entity, known as a delegated administration. Currently, in the Adina, Salvado and Chuquicamata divisions of the El Teniente company, the system of delegated administrations is in place and offers many benefits and positive features both for the company and for prevention in relation to the health and safety of its workers. The Radomiro Tomic division had the same arrangement until February 2012, when the Social Security Supervisory Authority learnt of the decision of the employer (CODELCO Chile) to hand over the administration and the health facilities to a private mutual company. According to FESUC, this decision is clearly detrimental to the health and safety of the company's workers employed in the Radomiro Tomic division and imposes a model that jeopardizes the situation of workers in other plants. The FESUC considers that the manner in which the decision was taken is in breach of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to continue providing information on its national policy on occupational health services and on the consultations held with the social partners on the measures to be taken to give effect to the Convention. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government indicated that the Ministry of Health does not have the competence to ensure its implementation. The Committee recalls that it is the responsibility of the Government to give effect to ratified Conventions, and not of any specific ministry. The Committee also recalls that Article 2 of the Convention sets out the obligation to formulate, implement and periodically review a coherent national policy on occupational health services in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers and that Article 4 establishes the obligation of the competent authority to consult the most representative organizations of employers and workers on the measures to be taken to give effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which effect has been given to these Articles of the Convention, namely on the consultations held and their outcome, including with regard to the type of health services applicable to the Radomiro Tomic division.

Articles 5 and 8. Functions of the occupational health services as are adequate and appropriate to the occupational risks of the undertaking and participation of workers. Requirement for the employer, the workers and their representatives to cooperate and participate in the implementation of organizational and other measures relating to occupational health services on an equitable basis. The Committee notes the FESUC's reference to the introductory paragraph of Article 5 of the Convention, under the terms of which "... with due regard to the necessity for the workers to participate in matters of occupational health and safety, occupational health services shall have such of the following functions as are adequate and appropriate to the occupational risks of the undertaking". The FESUC also makes reference to Article 8 of the Convention, in accordance with which the employer, the workers and their representatives, where they exist, shall cooperate and participate in the implementation of the organizational and other measures relating to occupational health service on a equitable basis. The FESUC considers that the new system will have an impact on the application of the above Articles. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which it ensures that effect is given to these Articles of the Convention through the health services model recently adopted in the Radomiro Tomic division, in both law and practice. Please indicate in particular the manner in which it is ensured that the employer, the workers and their representatives cooperate and participate in the implementation of organizational and other measures relating to occupational health services on an equitable basis. The Committee also requests the Government to pay particular attention to how effect is given to Article 5 of the Convention in CODELCO as for some years it has been making comments on the application of this Article in another division of the same company.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

China

Article 11(c) of the Convention. Production of annual statistics on occupational accidents and diseases. The Committee notes that in 2007 the State Council issued a Regulation on Reporting, Investigation and Handling of Production Safety Accidents (State Council Decree No. 493), which sets out comprehensive rules concerning "safety accidents", including classification, reporting responsibility and timeframe, and the facts of the accidents, as well as the investigation, handling and publication of such accidents. The Committee further notes that the new Reporting System for Production Safety Accidents Statistics (Notice No. 98), issued in 2012, established the regime of statistical monthly, quarterly and annual reports, as well as supervision of accident investigations and pursuit of accountability. In this regard, the Committee notes that the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), in a communication dated 1 September 2010, calls on the Government to compile and publish statistics, particularly at a provincial, municipal and county level, for greater transparency. In addition, the ITUC alleges that statistics concerning occupational diseases are largely undermined by the high number of undiagnosed cases among internal migrant workers who return to their place of origin when they fall ill. Noting that the abovementioned Decree and Notice concern the reporting, investigation and handling of, and statistical report on "safety accidents" in general, and not specifically occupational accidents and diseases, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the authority responsible for producing annual statistics on occupational accidents and diseases, and the methodology applied. The Committee further asks the Government to indicate whether the abovementioned monthly, quarterly and annual statistical reports are publicly available; and in that case, provide such statistical information to the Office. The Committee also asks the Government to provide further information on whether the notification of occupational accidents and diseases, as required by national law, encompasses all workers, in particular with regard to the comments by the ITUC concerning internal migrant workers.

Article 15. Coordination between various authorities. The Committee notes that the State Commission Office for Public Sector Reform issued the Circular on Division of Labour for Functions of Occupational Health Regulation (No. 104) in 2010, which requires all departments involved to perform their respective duties while maintaining effective coordination. In addition, the Committee notes that the inter-ministerial Production Safety Committee of the State Council is composed of officials from various government bodies, including the Ministry of Health. In its 2010 communication, the ITUC called for better coordination between occupational hazard inspection and occupational health examination. In this respect, the Committee would appreciate receiving further information from the Government on the coordination between the various authorities and bodies responsible for occupational safety and those responsible for occupational health. In addition, noting that the term "production safety" encompasses more than just occupational safety, the Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the role of the Production Safety Committee of the State Council in relation to occupational safety and on whether a similar inter-ministerial mechanism exists in relation to occupational health.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. 1. Workplace accidents. The Committee welcomes the Government's efforts to improve the situation concerning production safety in the country, including enhancing the legal system and administrative regime for production safety; building up the capacities of those responsible for ensuring safety supervision and inspection; cracking down on illicit or illegal acts of production and construction; and launching special safety campaigns in major industries and sectors. The Government indicates that these efforts have yielded positive results across the country and that the situation of production safety is moving steadily in the direction of sustainable improvement. The Government also acknowledges the challenges brought about by the current process of rapid industrialization and urbanization in the country, which represents a peak phase for possible safety accidents. The Committee notes that in 2010, compared to the figures for 2005, there was a 49.4 per cent decrease in the number of “safety accidents”, with a total of 354,500; and the number of fatalities decreased by 37.4 per cent, with a total of 79,500. This decrease has been seen in many of the high risk sectors, including mining, hazardous chemicals, fireworks, road transport, fire fighting, railway transport, water transport, fishing and agriculture (machinery), etc. The Committee requests the Government to specify how many of the “safety accidents” recorded, and indicated above, relate to occupational accidents, which cover an occurrence arising out of, or in the course of, work, and to provide this information disaggregated by sector activities, age and gender if possible. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to target the high number of occupational accidents in high risk workplaces.

2. Occupational diseases. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the current legislation in place with regard to occupational diseases. The Committee in particular notes with interest that in August 2009, the State Administration of Work Safety, the Ministry of Health, the Ministry of Human Resources and Social Security and the All-China Federation of Trade Unions jointly carried out special enforcement operations targeting dust and highly toxic material hazards in multiple sectors, including the jewellery processing sector. These special operations focused on urging producers and operators to fulfil their principal obligations of preventing and controlling occupational hazards. The Committee notes however, that the Government has not responded to the concerns raised by the ITUC in relation to the alleged problems in the application of this Convention in relation to occupational diseases, and in particular concerning the lack of information and training given to workers on the risks of occupational diseases and hazards in the workplace, including specific health risks. The Committee therefore reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, with reference to the comments by the ITUC concerning occupational diseases, including statistical information on the number of workers covered by the legislation, the number and nature of contraventions reported, and the number, nature and causes of occupational diseases reported.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes the responses provided in the Government’s report concerning the Committee’s previous comments on the application of the Convention. The Committee notes however, that the Government’s report does not address the issues raised by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in its communication dated 1 September 2010, and transmitted to the Government on 15 September 2010. In this regard, the Committee reiterates its request that the Government respond to the 2010 communication by the ITUC, and in particular to provide further information concerning the following points.

Article 8(1)(b) and (c) of the Convention. Cooperation between two or more employers undertaking activities simultaneously at one construction site. The Committee notes the comments by the ITUC concerning the long-established practice of subcontracting in the construction industry in China. The ITUC alleges that subcontracting offers construction companies increased opportunities to exploit the labour market, reduce costs, and allows employers to avoid responsibilities concerning health and safety. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the application of the requirements under Article 8 in practice, with reference to the comments raised by the ITUC concerning subcontracting.

Article 13. Safety at the workplace. Article 28. Health hazards. The ITUC states that the construction industry in China, and its safety management practices, do not meet international standards, national laws and regulations due to a lack of prevention, illegal operations, poor preventive and protective measures, lack of provision of personal protection equipment and effective and regular safety inspections, audits and training. In addition, the ITUC refers to the highly dangerous working environment that construction workers in China are faced with, including exposure to a wide range of chemical, physical and biological hazards including noise, dirt, dust, chemicals, working at height, in confined spaces, heavy work and stress. The Committee asks the Government to respond to the comments by the ITUC concerning the lack of overall safety, and the health hazards at workplaces in the construction industry, and to indicate the application of the provisions of this Article in practice, for example the number of contraventions reported in this area, and any follow-up measures undertaken.

Article 18(1). Work at heights including roof work. The ITUC indicates examples of cases of workplace deaths caused by the failure to ensure that workers wear safety harnesses when working at heights, and that workers apparently do not wear safety harnesses when working at heights so that they can work faster to finish the construction project. The Committee asks the Government to respond to the comments by the ITUC concerning the enforcement of safety measures for work at heights, and to indicate the application of this Article in practice, for example the number of contraventions reported in this area, any follow-up measures taken, and any measures taken to promote the use of safety harnesses at construction sites.

Article 32. Welfare of workers and the provision of separate sanitary and washing facilities. The Committee notes the response provided by the Government, which indicates the relevant provisions of the Construction Site Environment and Sanitation Standards which provide for sanitary and washing facilities on construction sites. The Committee notes however, that there is no provision which specifically provides for men and women workers to be provided with separate sanitary and washing facilities. The ITUC alleges that construction workers live in temporary accommodation near construction sites with poor sanitary and washing facilities and potentially dangerous food and water, and that these construction sites do not have separate sanitary and washing facilities for male and female workers, and as a result sexual harassment is frequent. The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that men and women workers are provided with separate sanitary and washing facilities; and in the meantime to provide information on how the provisions of Article 32(3) are applied in practice, with reference to the concerns raised by the ITUC.

Article 33. Information and training. The ITUC indicates that while construction workers are entitled under national law to receive safety training on safe operation and protection measures, that in reality, more than 95 per cent of migrant workers on construction sites lack on-the-job training. The ITUC also observes that construction workers are exposed to a wide range of life-threatening conditions, including HIV/AIDS, and that despite this, there is a lack of HIV awareness which makes workers vulnerable to the risk of contracting this disease. The ITUC recognizes the efforts by the Government in this area, including the provision, in 2009, of skills training to more than 12 million migrant construction workers. The ITUC notes, however, that the training was aimed at helping workers re-enter the labour market during the financial crisis, and the ITUC does not have information on whether the training incorporated safety matters. The Committee asks the Government to respond to the comments raised by the ITUC concerning the provision of information to, and training of, construction workers, and to indicate the application of this Article in practice, for example the number of contraventions reported in this area, and any follow-up measures undertaken.

Article 34. Reporting of accidents and diseases. The ITUC alleges that the official figures on construction safety are regarded as less than reliable, in particular the accident reporting system, and that missing report cover ups, and delayed reports are common occurrences. The ITUC calls on the Government to include health and safety targets and indicators of success in the national plans, and to implement more robust reporting systems. In this respect, the Committee also refers the Government to its comment this year regarding the application by China of the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155). The Committee asks the Government to respond to the comments by the ITUC concerning the reporting of occupational accidents and diseases, for example information on the number, nature and cause of occupational accidents and diseases reported, with specific reference to the construction sector.

Article 35. Effective enforcement of the provisions of the Convention. The ITUC indicates that there is continued evidence of breaches of national laws and regulations regarding safety and health in the construction industry, including widespread bureaucracy, collusion by officials, lack of enforcement and lack of cross-departmental cooperation. The ITUC alleges that reckless on-site supervision also remains common and that many construction sites operate without professional inspectors, and inspection activities on construction sites are often carried out by the supervisor who may not themselves have ever received safety inspection training. In addition, the ITUC states that local authorities appear to have a lack of safety awareness, do not effectively enforce the safety laws and regulations, do not understand their responsibilities and do not engage in monitoring. While penalties exist for breaches by employers who cause serious harm to the health of their employees, the ITUC alleges that enterprises have been known to simply change the company name, location or legal representative as a means of evading compensation payments. In this respect, the Committee also refers the Government to its comment this year regarding the application by China of Convention No. 155. The Committee asks the Government to respond to the comments by the ITUC concerning implementation of the Convention through appropriate inspection services and the provision of appropriate penalties, and to indicate the application of this Article in practice, for example the measures taken by the Government to monitor the effective enforcement of the provisions of the Convention at the national, regional and provincial levels.

Part VI of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in relation to the special operations undertaken to crack down on illicit or illegal activities in the construction industry as well as the promotion of safety. The Government indicates that special inspections have been intensified in key areas of the construction industry which carry higher risks for serious accidents, including colossal scaffolds, deep foundation pits, large lifting machines, etc. The Committee notes the comments by the ITUC, which state that the increasing growth of development, downsizing, outsourcing, the use of labour-only subcontracting and the so-called self-employed have had a negative impact on the management and control of health and safety in construction. The ITUC notes that the accident rate is increasing and includes buildings collapsing, workers being crushed by falling building materials and scaffolding, being maimed by faulty machinery or falling from heights. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, with reference to the comments by the ITUC; and in particular to indicate any data available on the number of workers covered by the legislation, the number and nature of the contraventions reported, the number, nature and cause of occupational accidents and diseases reported, with specific reference to the construction sector, and any follow-up measures taken.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Colombia

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes the Government's report received on 25 September 2012, a communication from the Single Workers' Union of Materials for the Construction Industry (SUTIMAC) received on 10 April 2012, and a communication from the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC) received on 31 August 2012.

Background. For a number of years the Committee has been asking the Government to adopt legislation which gives effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee is also following up on joint communications from the CTC and the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT) dated 2010 and 2011, which claim that no public policies have been established at the national level by the Government for the control and management of asbestos; the legislation is not being aligned to the Convention; technical standards are not being implemented; no measures are being promoted by the Government to eliminate the risk; the Government has transferred all the occupational safety and health obligations to the employer; precarious measures are set out in internal work regulations or in occupational health committees and these are not applied in practice; and there is no national training programme on the handling and use of asbestos. The CUT and the CTC also assert that there is no dialogue with the various social partners; and they conclude that they consider it necessary to adopt a public policy for the total prohibition of asbestos. The CUT and CTC add that over 10,000 tonnes of asbestos per year are extracted from the mine located in the department of Antioquia, which is absolutely hazardous for the miners, as the mining is carried out using artisanal techniques, without technology. The Committee notes that the Government has not sent any comments on the joint communication of 2011.

Communication from SUTIMAC. The trade union asserts that it represents over 4,800 members and represents some 75,000 indirect workers involved in the production and manufacture of high-density fibro-cement and friction materials; that in the context of the joint occupational health committees SUTIMAC has been monitoring the observance of established hazard control measures and the national legislation; that the estimate of 320 deaths per year related to asbestos in Colombia does not reflect the reality experienced by workers in the sector; and that they consider that the measures adopted and pending adoption allow the sector to ensure health and safety at work for persons working with chrysotile fibres. It urges the Government to recruit adequate numbers of duly qualified labour inspectors to ensure that a constant monitoring and verification of safety measures in production plants is carried out, thereby ensuring decent and safe work. SUTIMAC indicates that the mine involved in chrysotile exploitation belongs to the workers engaged in the exploitation and marketing of these fibres. Their representatives form part of the National Commission on Occupational Health in the Asbestos Sector.

Communication from the CTC received in 2012. The CTC reiterates the need for the total prohibition of asbestos in Colombia and declares that 44 countries have already totally prohibited the use of asbestos and that in Canada and the United States it has been phased out completely.

Article 3 of the Convention. Legislative measures for the prevention and control of and protection of workers against health hazards. In its previous observation the Committee urged the Government to ensure the rapid adoption of legislation giving effect to the provisions of the Convention, including the adoption of pending draft legislation and the preparation of new legislation where necessary, and asked it to provide information in this respect. The Committee welcomes the adoption of Decision No. 007 of 4 November 2011 of the Ministry of Health and Social Protection adopting the Regulations on safety and health with regard to chrysotile and other fibres and its technical annex, but notes however that it will only enter into force in May 2013. The Government states repeatedly this Decision and its technical annexes will become binding. The Committee notes that these Regulations will constitute an important step towards the effective implementation of the Convention. The Committee further notes that this Decision will respond to certain issues raised by the CUT and CTC, which were referred to above. The Committee requests the Government to continue to supply information on any legislation adopted in relation to the present Convention.

Technical standards. In its previous comment the Committee asked the Government to supply information on the compulsory nature of the technical standards relating to asbestos. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on this matter. The Committee again requests the Government to indicate whether the technical standards relating to the Convention are binding.

Article 4. Consultations with the most representative organizations of employers and workers concerned regarding the measures to be taken to give effect to the provisions of the Convention. In its previous comments the Committee, while noting that the Government holds consultations within the National Commission on Occupational Health relating to Chrysotile Asbestos and Other Fibres, also noted that the CUT and CTC were calling for real and effective dialogue and that they considered other forums of consultation to be more appropriate. The Committee noted that section 3(7) of Decision No. 1458 of 2008 includes a trade union delegate or workers' representative from each fibro-cement enterprise in the abovementioned National Commission, while in section 3(9) it includes a trade union delegate or workers' representative from each friction materials enterprise, and noted that the CUT and CTC did not appear to be represented in this Commission. The Committee expressed its hope that the Government would make efforts to include in consultations other organizations that meet the criterion of the most representative organizations of employers and workers concerned, and asked for information on the outcome of these consultations. The Government indicates that the workers' representatives participating in the abovementioned Commission include the secretary of SUTIMAC and one of the executive secretaries of the CUT but, with a view to maintaining full participation and in compliance with the Committee's recommendation, it will include other workers' organizations in the meetings of the Commission on Asbestos. The Committee requests the Government to indicate which other most representative organizations it has included in the Commission on Asbestos and to provide information on the consultations held concerning measures to be adopted in order to give effect to the provisions of the Convention and on the results thereof. The Government is also requested to provide information on the consultations held regarding the adoption of Decision No. 007 referred to above.

Article 5(1). Enforcement of the laws and regulations adopted pursuant to Article 3 of the Convention through an adequate and appropriate system of inspection. With regard to the comments from SUTIMAC requesting the Government to recruit adequate numbers of duly qualified labour inspectors to ensure that the constant monitoring and verification of safety measures in production plants is continued, thereby ensuring decent and safe work, the Committee requests the Government to take the appropriate steps to ensure an adequate and appropriate inspection system in relation to the present Convention and to supply information in this respect.

Article 9(a). Making work in which exposure to asbestos may occur subject to regulations prescribing adequate engineering controls and work practices, including workplace hygiene. The Committee notes that the Government makes a general reference to Decision No. 007 containing the measures referred to by the present Article of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which these measures are applied in practice to different types of work in which the worker may be exposed to asbestos, including at the mine referred to in the communications from the CUT, CTC and SUTIMAC.

Article 9(b). Prescribing special rules and procedures, including authorization, for the use of asbestos or of certain types of asbestos or products containing asbestos or for certain work processes. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the clauses of Decision No. 007 which set forth special rules and procedures, including authorization, for the use of asbestos or of certain types of asbestos or products containing asbestos or for certain work processes.

Article 10 (replacement of asbestos with other materials or prohibition of the use of asbestos) in conjunction with Article 3(2) (periodic review of national laws and regulations in the light of technical progress and advances in scientific knowledge) and Article 4 (consultation of the most representative organizations of employers and workers concerned). The Committee notes that in its communication of 2012, the CTC reiterates the need to revise the legislation in the light of scientific and technical knowledge and to consider the replacement or prohibition of all forms of asbestos, including chrysotile. In its previous comments the Committee recalled that any legislative measure must be the subject of consultation and periodic review in the light of technical progress and advances in scientific knowledge, in accordance with Article 3(2) of the Convention, and that accordingly Article 10 has to be viewed in the light of Article 3(2) and must be the subject of consultations, as required by Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee therefore asked the Government to undertake such a review according to the terms of the abovementioned Articles and to provide information on this matter. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has examined the possibility of replacement or prohibition contained in Article 10 of the Convention and for this reason Decision No. 007 explicitly prohibits the use of amphibole types of asbestos and chrysotile in friable, sprayed or sprinkled form. The Committee reminds the Government that the obligation to impose such prohibitions is established in Articles 11 and 12 of the Convention and so, when Article 10 of the Convention refers to replacement or prohibition, it means the other forms of asbestos not covered by Articles 11 and 12 of the Convention. Furthermore, the Government states that it is constantly reviewing this subject and until there is established proof of a less harmful substance to replace chrysotile, it will not consider the feasibility of total prohibition. The Committee requests the Government in accordance with Article 3(2) and in the context of consultations with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations concerned, as required by Article 4, to examine at intervals the possibility of replacement or prohibition as set out in Article 10 of the Convention and to provide information on such periodic review, including consultations and the outcome thereof.

Article 11. Prohibition of crocidolite and products containing this fibre. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that section 3.1.1(b) of Decision No. 007 prohibits the use of any amphibole type of asbestos. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the aforementioned section also prohibits products containing crocidolite.

Article 12. Prohibition on spraying of all forms of asbestos. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that section 3.1.1(c) of Decision No. 007 prohibits the application of chrysotile asbestos in friable, sprayed or sprinkled form. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the application of this prohibition in practice.

Article 13. Notification by employers to the competent authority of certain types of work involving exposure to asbestos. The Committee notes the Government's statement that section 2.2.12 of Decision No. 007 states that employers must send to their occupational risk administration (ARP) during the last quarter of the year, information on operations and workplaces in which the fibres covered by the regulations are present, and also on raw materials or supplies, the working population by levels of risk, and data on morbidity. Furthermore, according to section 2.1.2 of Decision No. 007, each ARP must provide the Directorate-General for Occupational Hazards at the Ministry of Social Protection with information on the number of enterprises, their affiliated workers; the recommended control and prevention measures; and the number of cases of asbestosis and other diseases whose classification testifies to a causal link with exposure to chrysotile asbestos and other similar fibres. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the obligation to notify the competent authority of specific types of work involving exposure to asbestos, including information on the notifications received and the types of work notified.

Article 14. Responsibility of producers and suppliers of asbestos, and manufacturers and suppliers of products containing asbestos, for adequate labelling. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 6.6.2 of Decision No. 007 lays down the obligation to label the initial packaging and states that all bags must be labelled, with the indication that they contain chrysotile and that their contents may be dangerous under certain conditions. Section 3.9 of the same Decision states that products containing chrysotile must bear a symbol with a caption stating "contains chrysotile – do not create or inhale dust – possible danger to health". The Committee notes that these paragraphs do not indicate who shall be responsible for the labelling. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the aforementioned sections place the obligation on the four categories of persons referred to in this Article of the Convention, namely producers and suppliers of asbestos and manufacturers and suppliers of products containing asbestos, and also to indicate the manner in which the application of these sections of Decision No. 007 is ensured in practice.

Article 15(2). Fixing, periodic review and updating of exposure limits or other exposure criteria in the light of technical progress and advances in technological and scientific knowledge. In its previous observation the Committee noted the Government's indication that for 2011 the threshold limit value (TLV) for chrysotile in workplaces was 0.1 fibres per cubic centimetre of air and asked the Government to indicate the text which establishes the limit value for asbestos and the manner in which it is ensured that enterprises and workers are aware of this limit value and that it is respected. The Committee notes the Government's reference in its report to sections 1.24 and 3.1.2 of Decision No. 007. The Government indicates that to ensure that both workers and occupational hazard administrations are aware of permissible limits for asbestos the regulations are being widely disseminated. However, the Committee notes that the abovementioned sections explain the concept of permissible limits and the method of calculation but do not indicate the permitted limit value, which, as stated by the Government in its previous report, is 0.1 fibres per cubic centimetre of air. The Committee urges the Government to indicate the legislative text which establishes the limit value for asbestos in order to ensure that enterprises and workers are aware of this limit value and that it is respected, and requests it to provide information in this respect.

Article 17. Demolition work. Authorization for demolition or removal work to be undertaken only by employers or contractors who are recognized by the competent authority as qualified to carry out such work. Obligation to draw up a workplan and to consult the workers or their representatives. In its previous comments the Committee urged the Government to give effect to this article in law and in practice and to provide information on this subject. It also asked the Government for information on the allegations from the CUT and CTC concerning the use of crocidolite in the construction sector. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has no knowledge of the use of crocidolite or of any complaints relating to its use and that the Ministry of Labour has to be informed for the relevant penalties to be imposed. The Government indicates that section 4.5 of Decision No. 007 gives effect to this Article of the Convention. The Committee notes that the aforementioned section contains instructions relating to prevention and protection measures but does not provide that only employers or contractors who are recognized by the competent authority as qualified to carry out such work shall be able to undertake the demolition of plants or structures containing friable asbestos insulation materials and the removal of asbestos from buildings or structures in which asbestos is liable to become airborne. Nor does it lay down the obligation for the employer or contractor to draw up a workplan specifying the measures to be taken before starting demolition work or to consult the workers or their representatives on the aforementioned workplan. The Committee again requests the Government to establish a system of authorization whereby only employers or contractors who are recognized by the competent authority as qualified to carry out the work referred to by this Article of the Convention shall be able to undertake it, and requests it to provide information on this matter. The Committee also requests the Government to adopt measures incorporating the obligation to establish a workplan in accordance with Article 17(2) and to supply information on this matter.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Croatia

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1991)

Legislation. The Committee notes with satisfaction the information provided in the Government's report concerning the adoption of the ordinance on the list of high risk machines and equipment (OG 47/02), the ordinance on machine safety (OG 135/05) and the ordinance on safety and health requirements for the use of work equipment (OG 21/08) which, inter alia, include provisions giving effect to Article 11(1) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Djibouti

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes that, for the fourth consecutive year, the Government's report has not been received and that, prior thereto and since 2000, the Government has submitted the same report which does not provide any new information in reply to the Committee's previous comments. While noting the efforts made in the country through the adoption of a new Labour Code in 2006 and the development and adoption of a Decent Work Country Programme 2008–12, the Committee must underscore that the reporting obligations undertaken by the Government are important and that a regular review of the situation in the country in relation to the matters covered in this Convention can be helpful for the Government in its further improvements, not only in relation to the application of the present Convention but in the area of occupational safety and health in general.

Plan of action (2010–16). The Committee would also like to take this opportunity to inform the Government that, in March 2010, the Governing Body adopted a plan of action to achieve widespread ratification and effective implementation of the key instruments in the area of occupational safety and health (OSH), the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), its 2002 Protocol, and the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187) (document GB.307/10/2(Rev.)). The Committee would like to bring to the Government's attention that, under this plan of action, the Office is available to provide assistance to governments, as appropriate, to bring their national law and practice into conformity with these key OSH Conventions in order to promote their ratification and effective implementation. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on any needs it may have in this respect.

In the meantime, the Committee must repeat its previous observation which reads as follows:

The Committee understands, however, that a new Labour Code has recently been adopted (Act No. 133/AN/05 of 28 January 2006) and notes with interest that it contains provisions concerning occupational safety and health that constitutes a general framework for the protection of workers against risks related to work. According to previously submitted information the relevant legislation would also include Order No. 1010/SG/CG of 3 July 1968 concerning the protection of workers against ionizing radiation in hospitals and health-care institutions, or in Order No. 72-60/SG/CG of 12 January 1972 on occupational medicine. With reference to article 125(a) of the newly adopted law providing for the adoption of implementing legislation to regulate measures for the protection of safety and health in all establishments and companies covered by the Labour Code, on a series of different issues including radiation protection, the Committee requests the Government to clarify whether the abovementioned Orders remain in force and, as appropriate, to transmit to it copies of any revised or complementing legislation once it has been adopted.

The Committee also notes the observations submitted by the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD) on 23 of November 2007, raising concerns regarding insufficient protection against ionizing radiation for employees at health-care centres. These observations were transmitted to the Government for comment on 21 September 2007, but no comments have been received to date.

Article 3(1). Protection of workers against ionizing radiations; Article 6(2). Maximum permissible doses; and Article 9(2) of the Convention. Instruction of the workers assigned to work under radiations. With reference to the foregoing and its previous comments, the Committee recalls that all appropriate steps shall be taken to ensure effective protection of workers against ionizing radiations and to review maximum permissible doses of ionizing radiations in the light of current knowledge. In this context, the Committee notes that the UGDT seems to indicate that, in practice, industrial undertakings using procedures involving ionizing radiation do not seem to apply uniform rules for the protection of workers against exposure thereto and that the workers engaged in, for example, health-care centres are not sufficiently informed of the dangers related to their activity and are not protected in an adequate way. The Committee again draws the Government's attention to the revised dose limits for exposure to ionizing radiation established on the basis of new physiological findings by the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) in its 1990 recommendations. The Committee requests the Government to respond to the observations made by the UGDT and urges the Government to take all appropriate measures, in the near future, and with due account of the 1990 Recommendations of the ICRP, to give full effect, in law and in practice, to these provisions of the Convention.

Article 7(1)(b) and (2). Exposure limits for young persons between 16 and 18 years of age. Prohibition against employing young persons under 16 in work involving exposure to radiation. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that there were no provisions in relevant legislation prohibiting the employment of children under 16 years of age in radiation work and fixing maximum permissible doses for persons between 16 and 18 who are directly engaged in radiation work, as called for by this Article of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take all appropriate measures to ensure the application of this Article in the near future.

Exceptional exposure of workers in situations of emergency. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee again draws the Government's attention to paragraphs 16–17 of its 1992 general observation under this Convention which concern occupational exposure during and after an emergency. The Government is requested to indicate whether, in emergency situations, exceptions are permitted to the normally tolerated dose limits for exposure to ionizing radiation and, if so, to indicate the exceptional levels of exposure allowed in these circumstances and to specify the manner in which these circumstances are defined.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Hygiene (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1964 (No. 120) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee understands that a new Labour Code has recently been adopted (Act No. 133/AN/05 of 28 January 2006) and notes that it contains provisions concerning occupational safety and health that constitute a general framework for the protection of workers against risks related to work. The Committee nevertheless requests the Government to provide additional information concerning the following points.

Articles 10, 13–16 and 18 of the Convention. With reference to the comments that it has formulated for several years, the Committee notes that article 125(a) of the Labour Code provides for the adoption of implementing legislation to regulate measures for the protection of safety and health in all establishments and companies covered by the Labour Code, in particular, with regard to lighting, ventilation or aeration, drinking water, sanitary facilities, evacuation of dust and fumes, precautions to be taken against fire, installation of emergency exits, radiation, noise and vibrations. The Committee trusts that the Government will adopt the abovementioned legislation in the very near future and that it will give full effect to Articles 10, 13–16 and 18 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of this legislation as soon as it has been adopted.

With reference to the advances that hopefully will be made through the Decent Work Country Programme 2008–12, including, inter alia, further cooperation with the social partners, the Committee urges the Government to make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

France

French Polynesia

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115)

The Committee notes the information that a new Labour Code for French Polynesia was adopted on 4 May 2011 (Act No. 2011-15) and that it includes provisions regulating the prevention of risks related to the exposure to ionizing radiation (sections Lp.4431-1 to Lp.4433-2 and A.4431-1 to A.4434-3) which, in terms of substance, reproduces virtually verbatim the provisions in Deliberation No. 91-019 AT of 17 January 1991. The Committee notes with regret that contrary to Articles 3(1) and 6(1) of the Convention and in spite of statements made in previous reports, due account does not seem to have been taken in the preparation of the Labour Code of the 1990 Recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) referred to in the General Observation of 1992 under this Convention. The Committee also notes the information that a guide, developed by the French nuclear safety authority on the main provisions relevant for protection against ionizing radiation in the medical and dental profession, has been edited and adapted for French Polynesia, and that the framework agreement for cooperation between the competent authorities and the nuclear safety authority, which expired 31 December 2011, is in the process of being renewed. With reference to the comments the Committee has been making since 1993, the Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts to institute relevant legislative changes to comply with the Convention in the light of current knowledge, to continue its efforts to ensure the application of the Convention in practice, and to inform the Committee of any progress made in these regards.

Against this background the Committee wishes, in particular, to stress the following main substantive issues.

Article 6. Dose limits for internal exposure to radiation. The Committee notes that pursuant to Section A.4431-1 the relevant provisions concerning prevention against risks for exposure to ionizing radiation do not cover internal exposure to radiation. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the effective protection of workers against internal exposure to ionizing radiations in conformity with Article 6.

Article 7. Dose limits fixed for workers directly engaged in radiation work and for pregnant women. The Committee notes that pursuant to sections Lp.4431-2 and A.4431-2 of the Labour Code, the maximum dose limit for external exposure of workers to ionizing radiation under normal working conditions over a period of 12 months is fixed at 0.05 Sv (or 50 mSv) but that, according to the 1990 Recommendations of the ICRP, the corresponding limit is fixed at an effective dose of 20 mSv per year, averaged over five years (100 mSv in five years), with the further provision that the effective dose should not exceed 50 mSv in any single year. The Committee also notes that as regards pregnant women, section A.4151-7 of the Labour Code provides that, from the time a pregnancy has been declared until the delivery, measures should be taken to ensure that the exposure to ionizing radiation of the lower trunk of pregnant women be reduced as much as is reasonably possible and that the accumulated exposure in any event should not exceed 10 mSv which is five times higher than the ICRP recommendation of 2 mSv. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the steps taken or envisaged to ensure that the maximum permissible doses of exposure for workers directly engaged in radiation work and for pregnant women are set in the light of current knowledge.

Article 8. Maximum permissible doses of exposure for workers not directly engaged in radiation work. The Committee notes that paragraph 9 of section A.4431-1 of the Labour Code defines the category of exposed workers as persons who, because of their work, may be exposed to annual doses of ionizing radiation greater than one tenth of the annual limit set for workers which, pursuant to paragraph 1 of section A.4431-2, is set at 0.05 Sv. (or 50 mSv) per year. It follows that the maximum permissible dose of exposure for workers not directly engaged in radiation work is set at 5 mSv per year which is five times higher than the values recommended by the ICRP. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the steps taken or envisaged to ensure that the maximum permissible doses of exposure for workers not directly engaged in radiation work are set in the light of current knowledge.

Article 11. Appropriate monitoring of workers and places of work. The Committee notes the information that pursuant to Decree No. 19 PR of 9 January 2012, the “Bureau Veritas” has been charged to ensure the controls prescribed in Lp.4431-1 and A.4432-7 of the Labour Code for a period of three years. It also notes that a medical inspector has not yet been appointed, that a post for such a medical inspector is foreseen in the budget of 2012 and that the recruitment process for the nomination of such an inspector is under way. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that a medical inspector is appointed in the very near future. The Committee requests the Government to provide copies of any relevant reports produced by Bureau Veritas as well as to provide information on measures it has taken to follow up on any recommendations made, violations identified and action taken in this regard.

Articles 12 and 13. Medical examinations. The Committee notes the provisions in the Labour Code concerning medical surveillance of workers. With reference to the terms of the Convention, the Committee notes that the relevant legislation provides for the conduct of medical examinations prior to taking up employment involving exposure to ionizing radiation. These provisions do not, however, entitle workers to receive “appropriate medical examinations” during their employment “at appropriate intervals” as provided in Article 12. Furthermore, the relevant provisions in the Labour Code do not specify the circumstances in which, because of the nature or the degree of the exposure, workers shall promptly undergo appropriate medical examinations pursuant to Article 13(a). The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the provision of appropriate medical examinations of exposed workers in full conformity with Articles 12 and 13.

Article 13. Emergency situations. With reference to its previous comments and its General Observations of 1987 and 1992 on this Convention including accounts made of the recommendations of the ICRP, the Committee notes that Article 13 provides that in circumstances to be specified, because of the nature or degree of the exposure, the employer should promptly take certain action; in particular, the employer should take any necessary remedial action on the basis of technical findings and medical advice. The recommendations of the ICRP as well as those of the ILO place an emphasis on the necessity of planning in advance the measures to be taken in abnormal situations. The Committee notes that the measures to be taken in abnormal or emergency situations are not regulated in the new Labour Code. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the measures taken or contemplated in relation to emergency situations involving possible exposure to ionizing radiation.

Article 14. Continued employment of exposed workers and the provision of alternative employment. The Committee notes that the relevant provisions in the Labour Code do not seem to give effect to the provisions of this Article. In this context the Committee also invites the Government to take into account the terms of paragraphs 28–34 and 35(d) of its 1992 General Observation on the Convention which, inter alia, refer to the need to find alternative employment for workers whose continued employment in a particular job is contra-indicated for health reasons and the efforts required to provide such workers with suitable alternative employment, or to maintain their income through social security measures or otherwise. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that full effect is given to this Article of the Convention and to provide information on the account taken of the needs of workers whose continued employment in a particular job is contra-indicated for health reasons.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide a general appreciation of the manner in which the Convention is applied in French Polynesia, including, for instance, extracts from official reports and information on any practical difficulties in the application of the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

New Caledonia

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information provided concerning the developments in the area of occupational safety and health in general in the country, including, in particular, the adoption of law No. 2009-7 of 19 October 2009 concerning occupational safety and health (OSH) as part of the implementation of the new Labour Code adopted in 2008. The Committee notes that the new OSH law is broad in scope, that it emphasizes prevention and risk assessment, that it includes detailed provisions regarding the functions of the labour inspection services, and that the Government refers to several activities destined to increase the general awareness to OSH issues. The Committee notes with regret, however, that the Government reports that no change in law and in practice has occurred as regards the specific requirements of this Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the new OSH law adopted, and urges the Government once again to pursue its efforts to institute legislative changes to comply with the Convention, to appoint a medical inspector and to inform the Committee of the results of these efforts including any progress made. Against this background, the Committee is bound to reiterate its previous comments, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government’s report, including the information concerning the adoption of Decision No. 547 of 25 January 1995 relating to the protection of workers against the hazard of ionizing radiations, as well as Orders Nos 3165-T, 3167-T, 3169-T, 3171-T and 3173-T of 10 August 1995. It wishes to bring the Government’s attention to the following points.

Article 1 of the Convention. Tripartite consultation. The Committee notes that the legislation referred to by the Government as giving effect to the Convention does not seem to contain provisions ensuring consultation with the representatives of the workers and the employers regarding the preparation and implementation of measures giving effect to the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged for this purpose.

Article 3(1) and (2), and Article 6. Appropriate measures for ensuring the effective protection of workers against ionizing radiations and for the review, in the light of knowledge available at the time, of the maximum permissible doses of ionizing radiations. In its report, the Government refers to the exposure limits set forth in sections 5 to 8 of Decision No. 547/CP of 25 January 1995. The Committee notes that these exposure limits reflect those set forth by the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) in 1977. In this regard, the Committee brings the attention of the Government to the fact that under the terms of Article 3(1) and (2), and Article 6, of the Convention, all appropriate steps shall be taken to ensure effective protection of workers, as regards their health and safety, against ionizing radiations and that, for this purpose, maximum permissible doses of ionizing radiations shall be kept under constant review in the light of “knowledge available at the time” and “new knowledge”. The Committee recalls that, following a recommendation of 1977, these maximum doses have been revised by the ICRP and that new exposure limits were set forth in its recommendations, adopted in 1990. The Committee refers to its recommendations in its 1992 general observation and emphasizes, in paragraph 11, that the ICRP set, inter alia, a maximum admissible dose limit of 20 mSv per year, averaged over five years (100 mSv in five years), but not exceeding 50 mSv in any single year. The Committee also invites the Government to refer to paragraph 13 of its general observation concerning the maximum admissible dose for pregnant women. The Committee notes that the legislation to which the Government refers is not in conformity with the latest recommendations of the ICRP according to which women who may be pregnant shall be ensured a level of protection broadly comparable with that provided for members of the general public (i.e. effective dose not to exceed 1 mSv per year). The recommendations also envisage that, once the pregnancy is declared, the equivalent dose limit to the surface of the woman’s abdomen should not exceed 2 mSv for the remainder of the pregnancy. Finally, the Committee notes that the legislation giving effect to the Convention does not seem to contain provisions ensuring the protection of the public in general against exposure to radiations. The Government is requested to indicate the measures taken or envisaged with regard to these points, thus ensuring the effective protection of the workers, in the light of the knowledge available at the time, according to the recommendations issued in 1990 by the ICRP.

Article 9(2). Instruction for workers. The Committee notes that section 10, paragraph 3, of Decision No. 547/CP of 25 January 1995, provides that any handling of industrial radiography or radioscopy apparatus shall be carried out by an employee having received special training. The Committee also notes that the second subparagraph of this section provides that an exemption to this measure may be granted by the Director of Labour in the case of electrical generators for fixed X-ray machines. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that all workers directly engaged in radiation work are duly trained as well as to indicate the criteria according to which the exemptions provided for in section 10, paragraph 3, subparagraph 2, of Decision No. 547/CP of 25 January 1995, are granted.

Article 14. Alternative employment or other measures offered for maintaining income where continued assignment to work involving exposure is medically inadvisable. The Committee notes that the legislation envisaged for the application of the Convention does not seem to contain provisions ensuring that no worker shall be employed or shall continue to be employed in work by reason of which the worker could be subject to exposure to ionizing radiations contrary to qualified medical advice. In this context, the Committee wishes to draw the Government’s attention to paragraph 32 of the 1992 general observation under the Convention where it is indicated that every effort must be made to provide the workers concerned with suitable alternative employment, or to maintain their income through social security measures or otherwise where continued assignment to work involving exposure to ionizing radiations is found to be medically inadvisable. In the light of the above indication, the Committee requests the Government to consider appropriate measures to ensure that no worker shall be employed or shall continue to be employed in work by reason of which the worker could be the subject of exposure to ionizing radiations contrary to medical advice and that, for such workers, every effort is made to provide them with suitable alternative employment or to offer them other means to maintain their income and requests the Government to keep it informed in this respect.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Germany

Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167) (ratification: 1993)

Observations by the German Confederation of Trade Unions (DGB). With reference to its previous observation the Committee notes that the Government has not commented on the observations by the DGB.

Article 3 of the Convention. Consultations with the social partners. Article 4. Risk assessment. Article 13. Measures to ensure that all workplaces are safe and without risk of injury to safety and health. The Committee notes that the DGB and its affiliate Union of Construction, Agriculture and Environment Works (IG BAU) state that work in the construction industry is marred by high accident rates. Although there was an overall increase in the total number of occupational accidents and diseases from 2009 to 2010 in both relative and absolute terms, the DGB maintains that the occupational accident risk for workers in the construction industry is far above the average for workers in Germany. Construction workers also tend to take early retirement and the proportion of older workers to the total workforce in many building trades (such as carpenters, roofers and scaffolders) is significantly lower (13.9 per cent) than the average for all occupations (26.5 per cent). In addition, the number of workers in the building trades applying for disability benefits is also higher than the average for all workers; and out of every 100 roofers and scaffolders who retire, 56 are on disability benefits, compared to 23 persons out of 100 for all occupations. The DGB considers that the cause for this is the widespread failure to enforce existing standards for occupational safety and health protection. On average, there is just one labour inspector for every 10,000 industrial workers. Furthermore, an important feature of the construction industry is the large number of small enterprises whose occupational safety and health standards are rarely inspected. Finally, the IG BAU considers there to be a great need for improvement in the regulatory sphere by, inter alia, by lowering to 25 kg the maximum permissible weight for all construction materials packed in sacks, and by introducing more stringent limits for soot and particle emission from construction machines. The Committee notes with concern that the statistical information provided by the DGB and the IG BAU appears to reflect a significant and disturbing situation regarding construction workers which calls for action on the part of the Government in the form of further analysis of the cause for the above average accident risk for construction workers and for the above average number of construction workers on disability benefits. The Committee urges the Government to take all relevant measures as soon as possible to address the issues raised by the DGB and the IG BAU, in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers, and to provide detailed information on the measures taken and their impact.

The Committee also requests the Government to respond to the remaining issues in its 2011 observation which read as follows:

Article 30(1). Provision of personal protective equipment. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government regarding the implementation of the provision of the Convention based on a consistent application of a risk management approach. The Committee notes in particular that the Government underscores that the objective of the relevant legislation – including the ordinance on the use of personal protective equipment (PPE) – is to arrive at the independent management of safety and health protection by enterprises, the core elements of such management being: risk assessment; the information and training of workers; and the inclusion of workers in decision making processes of the enterprise having regard to safety and health at work. The Government further states that therefore, as a rule, the Occupational Safety Act and the ordinances based on risk management lay down only essential framework conditions so as not to prevent employers and workers from achieving the level of autonomous action that is the aim of legislation; that these general requirements are underpinned by more concrete sub-statutory sets of rules and that employers implementing these rules can assume that they comply with the legal requirements. The Government indicates however, that a deliberate choice was made not to draw up a set of rules of this kind to assist with the implementation of the ordinance on the use of PPE as, according to the general principles set out in article 4 of the Occupational Safety Act, individual protective measures such as the wearing of PPE are subordinate to technical and organizational protective measures. The Government further states that as a result, PPE may be used either only in addition to other protective measures or only if risk assessment has showed that technical or organizational measures cannot be taken at all or merely to an extent that is considered insufficient. The Government goes on to emphasize that it should further be taken into consideration that the use of PPE in itself can impair or damage health, and that it is not advisable for the legislator to prescribe the compulsory use of PPE in certain work situations on construction sites as is impossible for all possible constraints to be covered by legislation; and that therefore only the employers can take all constraints into consideration, based on individual situation-related risk assessments. The Government also refers to the fact that other legislation specifically requires the provision and use of PPE if certain limit values are exceeded (for example the noise and vibration protection ordinance, hazardous substances ordinance and technical rules accompanying the hazardous substances ordinance, notably TRGS 500). Finally the Government indicates that the statutory accident insurance companies have made available a number of practical guides to help employers select appropriate PPE in areas including for example on the use of breathing equipment and on retaining best and coupling mans for retaining belts. The Committee wishes to recall that this approach places high demands on the enforcement of the provisions on risk assessment and their effective application in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide further detailed information on the application of this approach in practice including examples of the methods used to ensure such an effective implementation of this Article in practice.

Part VI of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the information provided regarding the elaboration of the common occupational safety and health strategy between the competent inspectorates of the Länder and the statutory accident insurance institutions, in which they agreed on core activities and harmonized information, advisory and implementing measures to reduce accidents and occupational diseases in the construction sector, in particular in building and assembly scaffolding and demolition, but that no interim reports are available for the reporting period. The Committee asks the Government to provide further detailed information on the impact of this common approach on the number of occupational accidents and diseases in the referenced sectors. In that context the Committee requests the Government to also provide information on whether and to what extent particular attention is given to occupational safety and health in demolition work involving demolition of buildings containing asbestos and any information on the incidence of asbestos related diseases among construction workers.

Guatemala

Maximum Weight Convention, 1967 (No. 127) (ratification: 1983)

Articles 3 and 7 of the Convention. Maximum weight of loads transported by an adult worker. For more than ten years the Committee has been repeatedly asking the Government to amend section 6 of Agreement No. 885 of the Executive Board of the Guatemalan Social Security Institute (IGSS), and has noted the Government's statement in successive comments that approval of the Occupational Safety and Health Regulations was imminent and that the latter would form the basis for amending the aforementioned Agreement. According to section 6 of the Agreement, the maximum weight that can be lifted by an able-bodied male under 60 years of age is 120 lb (60 kg) and the maximum weight that can be lifted by an able-bodied female under 50 years of age is 60 lb (30 kg). In its previous comments, the Committee has repeatedly asked the Government to take steps to amend Agreement No. 885 and, in the meantime, to take the necessary steps to ensure the full and binding application of these provisions of the Convention and to supply information in this respect. The Committee notes that the Government has not supplied any information on the amendment of the Agreement and the possible approval of the Occupational Safety and Health Regulations. It also notes a report from the IGSS attached to the Government's report, according to which the maximum recommended weight under ideal handling conditions is 25 kg and that women, young workers and older workers should not handle loads exceeding 15 kg. The report indicates that under special circumstances able-bodied, trained workers could handle loads up to 40 kg, provided that such work is occasional and performed under safe conditions. The report also refers to appropriate postures and preventive measures where the indicated weights are exceeded, mentioning as an example the use of mechanical aids and the lifting of loads by two or more persons. The Committee notes that the measures indicated in the report give effect to these provisions of the Convention but that they are not binding. It notes the discrepancy between these IGSS recommendations and Agreement No. 885, also of the IGSS, which is binding. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring IGSS Agreement No. 885 into conformity with the Convention, possibly using as a basis the Maximum Weight Recommendation, 1967 (No. 128), and the IGSS recommendations which the Government attached to its report, and to send information on any further developments in this regard.

Article 5. Steps to ensure that workers receive adequate training or instruction in working techniques, with a view to safeguarding health and preventing accidents. The Committee again requests the Government to provide information on the form of the training and instruction that is given to workers before they are assigned to work involving the manual transport of loads, and to include information on the IGSS recommendations.

Article 7. Young workers. The Committee notes the Government's statement that section 7 of Agreement No. 885 states that young persons over 13 years of age may lift, transport or move loads with weights appropriate to their respective ages, provided that this does not jeopardize their health or safety. The Committee refers to Paragraphs 19–23 of Recommendation No. 128, and in particular Paragraph 21, which states that where the minimum age for assignment to manual transport of loads is less than 16 years, measures should be taken as speedily as possible to raise it to that level, and Paragraph 22, which states that the minimum age for assignment to regular manual transport of loads should be raised, with a view to attaining a minimum age of 18 years. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to bring its law and practice into conformity with the Convention, to consider the guidance given by Recommendation No. 128, and to provide information on this matter, including detailed information on the sectors in which young persons perform tasks involving the manual transport of loads. The Committee also refers to this matter in its comments on the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. In its previous comments the Committee noted the Government's statement that there are no statistics on infringements relating to the handling of loads because there have been no complaints from workers. The Committee asked the Government to clarify on what legal basis workers could make complaints. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information in this respect and that the statistics supplied do not refer to the matters covered by the present Convention. The Committee requests the Government to clarify whether the labour inspectorate conducts inspections in the areas covered by the Convention and applies the relevant provisions to both scheduled inspections and the handling of complaints. The Government is also requested to indicate the sectors of activity with the greatest concentrations of workers who handle loads, including the extent to which such activity occurs in agriculture and mining and the manner in which the Government ensures the application of the provisions of the Convention.

Article 3 of the Convention. Measures to be taken for the prevention and control of health hazards due to occupational exposure to asbestos. In its previous comments the Committee noted the Government's indication that draft Occupational Safety and Health Regulations would form the foundations for regulation of the use of asbestos and that it was planned to draw up specific technical standards on the prevention of hazards arising from the use of asbestos. In view of the fact that the information available did not enable it to gain a full picture of the application of the Convention, the Committee asked the Government to supply a detailed report. The Committee notes with regret that, according to the Government's brief report, no law has been adopted in Guatemala which regulates the use of asbestos. From its initial comments onwards, the Committee has repeatedly asked the Government to adopt the necessary legislative measures to give effect to the Convention. The Committee reminds the Government that under article 19(5)(d) of the ILO Constitution, any member State which ratifies a Convention undertakes to "take such action as may be necessary to make effective the provisions of such Convention". The obligation does not merely consist of incorporating the Convention into national law but also entails the need to enforce its application in practice and give effect to it in legislative terms by any other measures that are in conformity with national practice, such as those provided for by the Convention (for example, court decisions, arbitration awards or collective agreements). Furthermore, the Convention requires national law to regulate certain matters covered by various Articles of the Convention, such as Article 9 (prevention and control measures), the effective application of which depends on the legislation adopted pursuant to Article 3 of the Convention; Article 11 (prohibition of the use of crocidolite); Article 12 (prohibition of spraying of all forms of asbestos); and Article 13 (employers' obligation to notify the competent authority of the types of work involving exposure to asbestos). In the case of Article 13, the Government indicates "none" in its reply. The Committee understands this reply to indicate that no type of work involving exposure to asbestos has to be notified to the competent authority. The Committee notes with concern that no progress has been recorded in the implementation of the Convention, more than 20 years after its ratification. Nor does the report contain any indication that any action is being taken by the Government to ensure the application of the Article of the Convention in practice, wherever possible given the absence of legislation in this area. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps to give legislative effect to the Convention and to supply detailed information on this matter. The Committee invites the Government to submit a formal request for technical assistance from the Office in this respect.

Article 4. Consultations with the most representative organizations of employers and workers concerned regarding the measures to be taken to give effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to undertake all possible efforts to ensure that consultations are held as soon as possible, with the most representative organizations of employers and workers concerned, on measures to be taken to give effect to the provisions of the Convention and to provide detailed information on the outcome of these consultations.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

Guinea

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the Government indicates, in its last report, that a draft Order respecting air pollution, noise and vibration, cesspools, drinking water and protection against radiations had been prepared, but was subsequently separated into several draft Orders to make them more easily applicable. These draft Orders should have been adopted some time ago. However, the Advisory Commission on Labour and Social Legislation, as a tripartite commission, is composed of various members with very different concerns and sometimes constraints at the national level, which prevented it from completing its usual session. Furthermore, the Government states that the State of Guinea has priorities, even with regard to the adoption of laws and regulations. The Committee states that the Government has been expressing the intention for many years of adopting regulations to protect workers against ionizing radiations, without however in practice taking the necessary measures to this effect. It notes with regret that the Government's attitude disregards the urgency of taking the necessary legislative action for the adoption of regulations respecting protection against ionizing radiations. In this respect, the Committee recalls that this Convention was ratified by Guinea in 1966 and that since then the Committee has had to comment on various points concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee recalls that, when the Government takes the sovereign decision to ratify a Convention, it undertakes to adopt all the necessary measures to give effect to the provisions of the Convention in question. The Committee also considers that, while the Government may cite the existence of other matters which must take priority in the adoption of laws and regulations, it would be appropriate after the number of years that have elapsed for it to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Orders relating to the application of the provisions of this Convention are adopted as soon as possible. The Committee therefore once again hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to report on the adoption of provisions covering all activities involving the exposure of workers to ionizing radiations in the course of their work and in conformity with the dose limits referred to in its general observation of 1992, in the light of current knowledge, such as that contained in the 1990 Recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) and in the Basic Safety Standards for Protection Against Ionising Radiation and for the Safety of Radiation Sources of 1994.

Articles 2, 3(1), 6 and 7 of the Convention. In its previous comment, the Committee noted the Government's statement that the current dose limits correspond to an equivalent of an annual dose of 50 mSv for persons exposed to ionizing radiations. The Committee had recalled the maximum dose limits for ionizing radiations established in the 1990 Recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection and in the 1994 Basic International Safety Standards for Radiation Protection. For workers directly engaged in work exposed to radiation, this limit is 20 mSv per year averaged over five years (100 mSv over five years), and the actual dose must not exceed 50 mSv in any year. The Committee also draws attention to the dose limits envisaged for apprentices aged from 16 to 18 years, set out in Annex II, paragraph II-6, of the 1994 Basic International Safety Standards for Radiation Protection. The Committee once again hopes that the maximum doses and quantities to be included in the Government's draft Order will be in conformity with the maximum permitted doses and quantities, and that the Government does indeed envisage adopting the above draft Order.

Situations of occupational exposure in emergencies and provision of alternative employment. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the measures which have been taken or are envisaged in relation to the points raised in paragraph 35(c) and (d) of the conclusions of its 1992 general observation under this Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes the information that no legislative changes have yet been undertaken but that a new Labour Code is being prepared, and that section 231.3 of this Labour Code will resolve the question raised by the Committee previously. The Committee is required to recall that since 1998 it has been asking the Government to make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future to ensure full compliance with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to submit a copy of all relevant legislation to the Office once it has been adopted. In the meantime the Committee must repeat its previous comment which read as follows.

Article 11 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's reply to its previous comments indicating that it has taken due note that section 170 of the Labour Code seems to permit employers to authorize or to order workers to remove safety devices, contrary to Article 11 of the Convention. It also notes the Government's statement that such authorization is only based on prior measures taken by the employer to avoid all exposure to occupational risks, and that in any event it is the responsibility of the employer to promote best safety conditions at workplaces periodically visited by the labour inspectorate. The Committee would nonetheless request the Government to consider including in the draft Labour Code implementing regulations that are in preparation, a specific provision prohibiting such authorization or order to remove safety devices, as required by this Article of the Convention.

Legislation. The Committee notes the information that no legislative changes have yet been undertaken but that a new Labour Code and related legislation – including in the areas of the distribution of drinking water and sanitary facilities at enterprises – which will take into account the comments by the Committee under this Convention, is still being prepared. The Committee must therefore repeat its statement that since 1989, it has been asking the Government to adopt the ministerial orders envisaged in section 171 of the Labour Code in the following areas: ventilation (Article 8 of the Convention); lighting (Article 9); drinking water (Article 12); seats for all workers (Article 14); and noise and vibrations (Article 18), in order to give effect to these provisions of the Convention. The Committee hopes that such orders will be adopted after consultation with the representative organizations of employers and workers, in accordance with Article 5 of the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. The Committee notes the affirmation by the Government that all workers in the public as well as private sectors, are covered by occupational safety and health provisions. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information about the relevant legislation in this respect. To the extent that such legislation has not yet been adopted, it hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures in the near future to ensure a full application of the Convention in the public service and requests the Government to indicate the progress made in this regard.

Part IV of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the information that the Labour Code covers all workers in the private sector, that the 100,000 public sector workers are covered by public service legislation. It also notes the information that 11 technical occupational safety and health inspections were conducted in the course of 2011, but that no information was provided regarding the outcome of these inspections. The Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the fact that the information that it is requested to provide in this respect includes, inter alia, the number and nature of the contraventions reported. This type of information may be found, for example, in the reports of the labour inspection services.

Benzene Convention, 1971 (No. 136) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received for the seventh consecutive time. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the Government does not presently intend to amend Order No. 2265/MT of 9 April 1982, but envisages formulating, in consultation with the social partners, technical guidelines on harmful, hazardous and carcinogenic products, particularly benzene. The Committee also notes that the guidelines envisaged will be made available to all users. It hopes that the guidelines will be formulated and adopted without delay and requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this matter.

Article 4(2) of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's information on processes which use methods of work that are as safe as those carried out in an enclosed system. It notes in particular that the increase in labour and health inspections in enterprises and the involvement of Workers' Committees for Health, Safety and Working Conditions (CHSCT) ensure that the processes are carried out under the safest possible conditions. The Committee requests the Government to provide an indication of the frequency of the inspections carried out in enterprises that use benzene. It also requests the Government to provide copies of the statistics collected during inspections, to enable the Committee to assess the extent to which this provision of the Convention is applied in practice.

Article 6(2) and (3). With regard to the concentration of benzene vapour in the air of workplaces, the Committee notes that a draft Order concerning data files on the safety of chemical substances establishes a level not exceeding 10 ppm or 32 mg/m³ over an eight-hour time-weighted average. The Committee accordingly concludes that the ceiling established in the draft Order is lower than the one established in the Convention when it was adopted in 1971. It nevertheless wishes to point out to the Government that the threshold limit value recommended by the American Conference of Government Industrial Hygienists (ACGIH) is 0.5 ppm over an eight-hour time-weighted average. It therefore invites the Government to take measures to bring the ceiling value established by the draft Order into line with the value recommended by the ACGIH. The Committee also requests the Government to specify the guidelines issued by the competent authority on the procedure for determining the concentration of benzene in places of employment. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of the abovementioned Order as soon as it is adopted.

Article 8(2). With regard to limiting the duration of exposure of workers who, for special reasons, may be exposed to concentrations of benzene in the air of places of employment which exceed the maximum established, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, a study is under way on this matter. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee also requests the Government to provide relevant extracts of the inspection reports and the statistics available on the number of employees covered by the legislation as well as the number and nature of violations reported, as requested under Part IV of the report form.

In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's statement that a draft Order on occupational cancer giving full effect to the provisions of the Convention had been formulated with ILO technical assistance. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether this Order is still under consideration for enactment.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Referring to the comments the Committee has been making for several years concerning Article 2(1) of the Convention, the Government has explained in several of its reports that, under section 4 of Order No. 93/4794/MARAFDPT/DNTLS of 4 June 1993, an employer is required to replace a carcinogenic substance or agent by a non-carcinogenic or less carcinogenic substance or agent provided that one exists, each time that such replacement can be envisaged in view of the given circumstances. The Committee notes that, in its last report, the Government indicates briefly that measures will be taken as soon as the new Labour Code is adopted to align the provisions of section 4 of the abovementioned Order. The Committee asks the Government to send a copy of the new Labour Code as soon as it is adopted and to indicate any progress made in this matter.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 1(1) of the Convention. The Committee notes that the draft conditions of service of the public service, which is being discussed within the Government, should contain the necessary measures to give full effect to the provisions of this Article of the Convention through their application in practice in all branches of economic activity. The Committee requests the Government to keep the International Labour Office informed of developments relating to these conditions of service and to provide a copy of them when they have been adopted.

Articles 4, 8 and 10. The Committee notes the information concerning a draft Order, prepared by the Government, which was due to be examined by the Advisory Committee on Labour and Social Legislation. This draft text would cover cesspits, drinking water, noise, vibration, air pollution, etc. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether this text is issued under section 171(1) of the Labour Code. It reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 4, the provisions adopted must prescribe the specific measures to be taken both for the prevention of occupational hazards due to air pollution, noise and vibration, and to control and protect workers against these hazards. The Committee also reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 8 of the Convention, the above draft text should provide for the establishment of criteria for determining the hazards of exposure to air pollution, noise and vibration and should specify exposure limits. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not indicate whether the above draft text provides, as required by Article 10, for the provision of personal protective equipment where the measures taken to eliminate hazards do not bring air pollution, noise and vibration within the limits specified by the competent authority. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of the adoption of this draft text, to provide a copy when it has been adopted and to inform it of any other specific measures taken for the application of the provisions of Articles 4, 8 and 10 of the Convention.

Article 9. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the technical measures and supplementary work organizational measures intended to eliminate the above hazards.

Article 14. The Committee notes that the National Occupational Medicine Service is equipped with a laboratory which is inadequately provided with appropriate instruments for its needs, but that the Government plans within a relatively short period to provide the above Service with modern and appropriate equipment. It requests the Government to keep the Office informed of the progress made in equipping the National Occupational Medicine Service and to inform it of any other measures taken to promote such research.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Kuwait

Benzene Convention, 1971 (No. 136) (ratification: 1974)

Article 6(3) of the Convention. Measurement of the concentration of benzene. Part IV of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the response provided by the Government concerning the periodical labour inspection visits carried out by the Industrial Environment Department at the Public Authority for the Environment, in workplaces at which workers are exposed to the risks of benzene vapours. The Committee notes, however, that the special memorandum on exposure to benzene and the results of field visits mentioned in the Government's report have not been received. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied, including extracts of inspection reports and data on the number of workers covered by the Convention disaggregated by gender, if possible, and the number and nature of the infringements recorded.

Kyrgyzstan

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the most recent report on the application of this Convention was received in 1994 and that it is yet uncertain whether Articles 5(3), 6(2), 12 and 14 are fully applied in the country. The Committee also notes, however, the publication in 2008 by the Government, in collaboration with the ILO, of Occupational safety and health in the Kyrgyz Republic – National profile. According thereto a number of laws, regulations and technical standards have been adopted since 1994 which indicate promising developments in the area of occupational safety and health. The Committee also notes that according to this national profile the Government is considering the ratification of the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), the Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167), and the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187). Welcoming these developments, the Committee asks the Government to report on progress in this regard. It also urges the Government to fulfil its reporting obligations under this ratified Convention, and invites the Government to consider whether it would benefit from technical assistance from the Office regarding the development of legislation giving effect to the provisions of the present Convention and the reporting obligations associated with such ratified Conventions. In the meantime the Committee must yet again repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 5(3) of the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of collective and other agreements containing mutual obligations designed to ensure safe and healthy working conditions.

Article 6(2). The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the general procedures prescribed for the collaboration of employers where two or more of them undertake activities simultaneously at one workplace. It also asks the Government to provide a copy of the Standards and Regulations for Health and Safety in Construction Work (No. III-4-80) and of the Order of the Ministry of Industry and Energy governing work done jointly by several enterprises at the same workplace in coalmining.

Article 12. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the Regulations on state medical supervision referred to in its report.

Article 14. The Committee asks the Government to describe the measures taken to promote research, in accordance with this Article.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Mexico

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1984)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the tripartite committee (representation made under article 24 of the Constitution of the ILO)

The Committee is following up the recommendations made in the report adopted by the Governing Body in March 2009 (document GB.304/14/8) in relation to the accident that occurred at the Pasta de Conchos coalmine in Coahuila. In its comments in 2011, the Committee noted the discussions in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2011 and its conclusions, a communication from the National Union of Federal Roads and Bridges Access and Related Services (SNTCPF), the Government's report and the Government's observations on a communication from that union received in 2010. The Committee observed that the discussion and conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards also referred to the follow-up of the report on the representation and, in that context, to the application of the Convention to workers in coalmines in Coahuila. The communications of the trade union in 2010 and 2011 also referred to the same situation. The Committee notes the Government's detailed report and a communication from the National Union of Workers (UNT). The UNT asserts that the Government has not provided reliable information to the public on the number of accidents, the general conditions of work and the organizations representing formal and informal workers engaged in the so-called pocitos (small-scale mines or pits), and it is unsure whether such information is included in the reports. It provides information on further occupational accidents, which have cost the lives of miners, and which was published in the media. The Committee invites the Government to provide the comments that it considers appropriate in relation to the communication of UNT.

1. Measures to be taken in consultation with the social partners

Articles 4(1) and (2), and 7 of the Convention. National policy. Overall reviews or reviews relating to specific areas: hazardous types of work such as those performed in the coalmining sector.

(a) Register of reliable data on existing mines and workers in these mines.

Background. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the Government, in Coahuila there are 909 mining concessions covering a surface area of 2.5 million hectares and that there are nine large coalmines and 62 medium-sized mines. With regard to the pocitos, the Government indicated that, as from March 2010, the GeoInfoMex satellite system was used for the location of such small-scale mines or pits, and that the project ended in May 2011. This resulted in the identification of 563 vertical shafts, in 297 of which activity was detected, which will be inspected. The Committee noted the distinction drawn by the Government between the registration of mining concessions and the registration of workplaces, and its indication that progress is being made in terms of coordination between the various State bodies connected with mining in Coahuila. The Committee requested the Government to continue supplying updated information on the number and type of mines and, recalling the request made by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, asked it to distinguish in that information between registered and unregistered mines. The Committee also requested the Government to indicate the estimated total number of miners in Coahuila, the number of registered miners and the estimated number of unregistered miners. These are two different but complementary issues that form part of the application of the Convention in all workplaces and to all workers at the workplace, for which reason it requested the Government to take the necessary measures to keep the fullest possible records in this respect and to provide information on this subject.

The 2012 report. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, according to the information provided by the General Directorate of Mines of the Secretariat of the Economy, as of May 2012, there were 30,458 current concessions at the national level, of which 2,463 are located in the State of Coahuila; of these, 970 are coalmines of which 297 are small-scale mines or vertical shafts. With reference to the 297 small-scale mines or vertical shafts identified in Coahuila, of which the Committee took note in its previous comments, 149 have been inspected. The Government indicates that, with regard to the estimated number of miners, according to the inspections carried out by the labour authorities, 24,527 workers have been detected, and that the Mexican Social Security Institute (IMSS) has a record of 95,000 workers in the mining sector. An inter-institutional group has been established composed of the Secretariat for the Economy, the Mexican Social Security Institute, the Office of the Federal Attorney for the Protection of the Environment, the Office of the Federal Attorney for the Defence of Labour and the Secretariat of Labour and Social Welfare (STPS), for the purpose of exchanging databases so as to develop a single register of enterprises engaged in mining. The Committee notes that the information provided does not indicate whether the 24,527 workers referred to by the Government are located in Coahuila or at the national level, or whether they consist of registered or unregistered workers. With regard to the figure of 95,000 workers, this appears to refer to the national level, and not only to Coahuila. The Committee observes that the information provided by the Government does not correspond fully to the requests made by the Committee in its most recent comment. The Committee hopes that the new working group will contribute to improving coordination and the compilation of reliable and clear data, as a basis for making progress in improving the safety and health conditions in mining. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the number and type of mines in Coahuila, including: (1) information distinguishing between registered and unregistered mines; (2) the total estimated number of miners in Coahuila; (3) the number of registered miners; and (4) the estimated number of unregistered miners.

(b) Accidents in the coalmining sector.

Background. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the Government, over the past ten years (2001–10), the IMSS has registered 38,069 occupational accidents and diseases in the mining sector and 340 fatalities. The Government indicated that, if a comparison is made between 2001 and 2010, the number of workers in the mining industry increased by 35.74 per cent and that, in terms of the number of fatalities, there was no significant change (31 in 2010 and 30 in 2001). The Committee noted that, according to a communication by the SNTCPF, between June 2010 and August 2011, 33 more miners died in occupational accidents, including 26 in Coahuila; 14 miners died on 3 May 2011 in Pit No. 3 of the BINSÁ company, none of whom were registered with the IMSS, including one miner under 14 years of age. In 2011, the Committee requested the Government to continue providing detailed information on these matters, including on accidents in coalmines and on the application of the Convention in the mines where the accidents occurred.

The 2012 report. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the labour authorities have at all times supported the families of the deceased workers, including through the lodging of applications for work-related benefits, and that it provides details in this regard. In this respect, the Federal Arbitration Board handed down decisions supporting the claims, although they have not yet been executed as the parties can still appeal. The Government provides information on the various forms of assistance provided for the families. The Committee also notes the tables attached by the Government, and particularly the table entitled "Accidents in the mining industry", which refer to certain accidents, the number of violations detected, the fines imposed and whether charges were made or are being brought. However, this information does not give the Committee an overview of developments in relation to occupational accidents in the coalmining industry, and whether their numbers have fallen or remained stable. The Committee requests the Government to provide statistical data on the number of occupational accidents in the coalmining industry, and particularly in Coahuila, with an indication of the number of accidents and victims since 2010 and up to the time of the preparation of the next report, with a distinction being made between accidents occurring in so-called "pocitos" and in medium-sized or large mines.

(i) The Lulú mine. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the information provided by the SNTCPF indicating that two workers died in the Lulú mine on 6 August 2009. According to the trade union, the mine has been in operation since 2001, but has never been inspected. In its 2011 report, the Government indicated that it had been planned to carry out an inspection in the Lulú mine in August 2009, but that the accident occurred on 6 August, before the inspection, so that an emergency inspection was carried out from 7 to 10 August, followed by another inspection on 13 and 14 August, and access was then restricted. The Committee also noted that the 2011 communication of the SNTCPF included as an appendix Recommendation 12/2011, of 29 March 2011, of the National Human Rights Commission (CNDH), which has constitutional status, concerning the accident in the mine. In its examination of the case, the CNDH states that "with the omissions described above on the part of the public servants of the Secretariat for Labour and Social Welfare (STPS) and the Secretariat for the Economy, operations at the enterprise were allowed under conditions that did not guarantee the integrity and the health of the workers, and they were placed in grave danger and were exposed to situations such as the one which resulted in the deaths (of two workers)". The CNDH added that this situation was in violation of Articles 7 and 9 of the Convention. In its 2012 report, the Government indicates that the representatives of the Office of the Federal Attorney for the Defence of Labour (PROFEDET) provided advice and legal representation to the widows, one of whom explicitly declined them, while the other did not come to the offices of the PROFEDET, for which reason it is assumed that she declined its services. The Government adds that the STPS accepted the recommendation of the CNDH, emphasizing that all times it discharged its functions of vigilance and verification in the mine in which the accident occurred. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether an inquiry has been held regarding the accident, as provided for in Article 11(d) of the Convention, and its findings, particularly on the causes of the accident.

(ii) The Ferber pocito mine. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the SNTCPF, on 13 August 2009, the periodic inspection of the mine was conducted and, leaving aside the provisions that do not apply to small-scale operations, 85 breaches of the regulations were reported and 76 corrective measures were ordered, and access was restricted. On 11 September 2009, a worker aged 23 died. The union adds that the labour inspectorate only appeared on 17 September 2009 to note or verify the implementation of the corrective measures ordered. It alleges that the STPS is negligent. The Committee noted that in the examination of the case conducted by the CNDH (Recommendation No. 85/2010 of 21 December 2010), it affirmed in similar terms that the provisions of the Convention were breached. In its 2012 report, the Government provides information on the action taken by the PROFEDET to obtain a higher benefit for the widow, and indicates that it achieved a higher sum than that originally granted. The Government adds that the STPS accepted the recommendation of the CNDH and recognized that its institutional responsibility consists of monitoring safety conditions in enterprises and punishing violations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on whether the applicable regulations require follow-up inspections within a fixed period when one or a substantial number of violations are reported or corrective measures ordered, and to provide details on the time frame stipulated for such follow-up. The Committee further requests the Government to indicate whether an inquiry has been held regarding the abovementioned accident as provided for in Article 11(d) of the Convention, and its findings, particularly on the causes of the accident.

The Committee also asks the Government to report whether inquiries have been held in accordance with Article 11(d) of the Convention, where cases of occupational accidents – in this case in the coalmining sector in Coahuila – appear to reflect serious situations, and also to report the findings of such inquiries, particularly as regards the causes of such accidents.

In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's statement that the Lulú mine and the Ferber pocito mine are not covered by the recommendations adopted by the Governing Body in its report on the representation, but that the Government was providing information on this subject to clarify such matters. The Committee indicated to the Government that information on accidents in these mines actually forms part of the follow-up to the recommendations made by the Governing Body, as the recommendation in paragraph 99(b)(i) of the report refers to ensuring the application of Articles 4 and 7 of the Convention, with particular emphasis on coalmines, and the recommendation in paragraph 99(b)(iii) of the report refers to ensuring the application of Article 9 of the Convention "in order to reduce the risk that accidents such as the accident in Pasta de Conchos occur in the future". The Committee therefore indicated that information on accidents in coalmines in Coahuila and the analysis of their causes contribute to determining the real impact of the measures adopted and understanding whether everything was done that could reasonably have been expected to avoid or reduce as far as possible the causes of the hazards inherent in the working environment, in accordance with Article 4(2) of the Convention.

The Committee also drew the Government's attention to the fact that the recurrence of accidents in mines which had manifestly failed to adopt the requisite occupational safety and health (OSH) measures, highlights the need to reinforce government action to ensure the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee therefore urged the Government to undertake, in accordance with Articles 4 and 7 of the Convention, and in consultation with the social partners, the periodic examination of the situation relating to the health and safety of workers and the working environment in coalmines in Coahuila, including the pocitos mines, with a view to identifying the principal problems, drawing up effective measures to resolve them, defining the order of priority of the measures to be taken and evaluating their results. The Committee also urged the Government to provide detailed information on this subject, including on the consultations held.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the forum for drawing attention to the OSH situation in coalmines in Coahuila consists of the National Occupational Safety and Health Advisory Commission (COCONASHT), the State Occupational Safety and Health Advisory Commissions (COCOESHT) and the State Occupational Safety and Health Advisory Subcommissions (SUBCOCOESHT). The Government adds that in 2008, a SUBCOCOESHT was created with the task of establishing appropriate measures to create safe conditions for workers in coalmines in Coahuila, and has held meetings with the social partners. The Committee notes with interest the information provided concerning the action taken or planned, as described below. The Government refers to an inspection programme with five main priorities: (1) the completion of the full register (work will continue on completing a list of mines and mineshafts to be visited with a view to updating the databases of the participating authorities); (2) documentary requirements (enterprises which have not been inspected previously will be required to provide documentation demonstrating compliance with the respective standards); (3) inspections (which will be programmed in workplaces where inspections have been carried out before or where the records show repeated failures to comply with the regulations); (4) large-scale mining (targeting ten mines with a large number of workers); and (5) promotion (with the objective of promoting compliance with the various official Mexican Standards, and specifically NOM-032-STPS-2008 on safety in underground coalmines). The Government also provided information on the training and support activities undertaken by the Government of the State of Coahuila and the Federation of Coal Producers; the preparation in 2011 of a guide to assess compliance with safety and health standards for small-scale coalmining operations; and training for STPS staff, with courses being undertaken between January 2011 and May 2012 with 154 participants. Furthermore, on 28 March 2012, the STPS concluded an agreement with the CNDH for the consolidation of a human rights culture among public officials in the STPS, with particular reference to inspectors.

Nevertheless, the Committee emphasizes that the purpose of the reviews envisaged in Article 7 of the Convention is to identify major problems, evolve effective methods for dealing with them and priorities of action, and evaluate results, and that the Government has not provided information on all the points raised. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether, in conformity with Articles 4 and 7 of the Convention and in consultation with the social partners, periodic examination has been undertaken of the situation relating to the health and safety of workers and the working environment in coalmines in Coahuila, including the pocitos mines, and to provide information on the following issues which, in accordance with Article 7 of the Convention, constitute the purpose of such examinations; (a) the major problems identified; (b) the methods proposed to deal with them; (c) the priorities for action; and (d) the evaluation of the results. Please also indicate the organizations of workers and employers represented and whether miners' organizations participated in the examination.

Article 9. Adequate and appropriate system of inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Lulú mine, which the Government closed on 10 February 2011, was first inspected on 7 August 2009, the day after the death of two workers, and that numerous irregularities relating to OSH were reported but that in spite of this the closure of the mine took 17 months. In the case of the Ferber pocito mine, the owner undertook the closure. The Committee referred to the Government's statement that the inspectors enforced the existing regulations. The Committee considered that, in such a case, the regulations do not appear to constitute a framework that ensures an appropriate and adequate inspection system for safeguarding the lives, safety and health of workers in underground coalmines. The Committee also reminded the Government that in its recommendations the Governing Body asked it to ensure, by all necessary means, the effective monitoring of the application in practice of laws and regulations on occupational safety and health and the working environment, in consultation with the social partners. The Committee therefore requested the Government to examine, as part of the review required pursuant to Article 7, the manner in which the labour inspectorate can be strengthened, particularly in cases of imminent danger, and to provide information on this matter and also on the measures of immediate enforcement currently available to the labour inspectorate, including closure, in the event of imminent danger to the health and safety of the workers. It also requested the Government to undertake an analysis of the inspections conducted, concerning which it provided information to the Committee, in order to identify the principal problems with a view to achieving greater effectiveness of inspection activities in coalmines, and also to provide information on the measures proposed to address these problems. Pending the above reviews, the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures very rapidly to safeguard the lives and safety of the workers and to provide information on this point. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's 2012 report, the STPS has established protocols for conducting safety and health inspections in mines, and that it also refers to the Guide for assessing compliance with safety and health regulations in small-scale coalmining operations. The Committee also notes the various measures for the strengthening of labour inspection, which are taken into account in various paragraphs of the present comment. The Government also refers to training courses and an increase in the number of federal labour inspectors, with 400 new inspectors envisaged in the budget for 2012. Reference is also made to the Support System for the Inspection Process (SAPI), through which the annual inspection programme will be generated at the central level, harmonization of records of violations and the measures ordered will be harmonized and greater control will be exercised over inspection activities in general. Work is also being undertaken for the specialization of inspectors in occupational safety and health regulations. With regard to measures of immediate enforcement, including closure, the Government indicates that all the measures proposed during a safety and health inspection within the mine shall be of immediate enforcement and permanent compliance and, in situations involving an imminent risk to the safety, physical integrity and life of workers, access to the interior of the mine has to be restricted in part or in full, with the reasons being given before the order is issued. In cases of failure to provide training to workers on the safety and health aspects of their work, their immediate withdrawal from the working area shall be ordered until compliance with this requirement is certified, where there exists a serious danger to the safety and health of the worker. The Committee nevertheless notes that the information provided previously, both by the Government and the SNTCPF, particularly regarding the Lulú mine, which took 17 months to close, does not appear to show that the inspectorate can, among its immediate powers, order the closure of the enterprise. The Committee notes that this point was not clarified by the information provided by the Government. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the measures of immediate enforcement currently at the disposal of the labour inspectorate, and to indicate clearly whether closure is among the measures of immediate enforcement in the case of imminent danger to the health and safety of workers.

Request for information on any developments concerning the possible ratification of the Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176), based on Mexican Official Standard NOM-032-STPS-2008 respecting safety in underground coalmines. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the results of the consultations held on 18 July 2011 with the Confederation of Chambers of Industry (CONCAMIN), the Employers' Confederation of the Republic of Mexico (COPARMEX), the Confederation of Workers of Mexico (CTM) and the Mining and Metallurgy Union. The Committee notes the Government's indication that on 17 August 2012, with a view to complying with the requirements set out in article 19 of the ILO Constitution respecting submission, the conclusion of the review of Convention No. 176 was transmitted to the Office of the Legal Advisor of the Secretariat for Foreign Relations so that the Senate can consider whether to ratify the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the developments relating to the ratification of Convention No. 176, including information on any obstacles identified concerning its ratification.

II. Technical assistance

In its previous comments, the Committee invited the Government to request technical assistance from the Office in relation to the possible ratification of Convention No. 176. The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, in its 2011 conclusions, also invited the Government to request technical assistance from the Office. In its most recent comments, the Committee indicated that, in view of the difficulties of application that persist in the coalmining sector, it once again invited the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office in order to address these problems and it requested the Government to notify the Office of its decision in this regard. The Committee notes the Government's statement that it can be seen from the information provided that the STPS has strengthened the action of the Federal Labour Inspectorate through an adequate inspection programme, although it nevertheless indicates that, if necessary, it will avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office. Recalling that the invitation to request technical assistance from the Office was related to the possible ratification of Convention No. 176, the Committee once again invites the Government to consider requesting technical assistance from the Office with a view to the possible ratification of Convention No. 176 and to provide information on this subject.

III. Other measures

Compensation – Pensions. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the benefits established by law, the collective contract and also on the situation in relation to the compensation ordered and the appeals of the family members of the workers who died in Pasta de Conchos. With regard to their legal appeals, the Government indicates that, despite having challenged the various measures ordered with a view to raising the daily wages received by the workers, the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation found that the benefits were to be calculated on the basis of the wage registered with the Mexican Social Security Institute (110–113 pesos/day). It also notes that, as a result of the criminal case deriving from the accident, the enterprise paid to all the dependants of the deceased workers the amount of 182,000 pesos in compensation. The Government also provides information on the payments made by the STPS in accordance with the rulings on claims for State responsibility. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on pending issues relating to the compensation and pensions of the family members of the deceased workers.

State and social benefits. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, an educational trust was created for the dependants of the workers of Pasta de Conchos to enable them to continue their studies while receiving financial and academic support, starting with their initial training until the conclusion of their studies. In June 2006, the educational trust covered 111 beneficiaries and, six years after it was created, six recipients of scholarships from the trust have completed their studies. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on this subject and to indicate how many of these 65 families have received assistance for access to housing.

Dialogue with the Pasta de Conchos families. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2011 a meeting was held with the Pasta de Conchos Families Organization which covered subjects related to the situation of mining in the Coahuila coal region. With reference to the recuperation of the bodies, the Government reiterates the importance of safeguarding the lives of rescuers, for which reason any possibility of recuperating the bodies has to be based on the fundamental premise of not risking the lives and limbs of other persons. The Committee requests the Government to continue the dialogue with the organization and with the families to find an appropriate solution concerning the complaints raised by the families of the victims of the Pasta de Conchos accident and it requests the Government to continue providing information on the dialogue.

The Committee also draws the Government's attention to its comments on the application of the Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150).

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Niger

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the Government's most recent report which is essentially a repetition of information previously transmitted, and which indicates that national legislation does not contain any specific provisions regarding air pollution, noise and vibration, and that no progress appears to have been made as to the draft legislation which is reportedly under development in order to give effect to the Convention. With reference to the fact that a significant period of time has passed since the Government ratified this Convention and undertook to implement it in the country, and that no progress appears to have been made in this direction, the Committee yet again urges the Government to take the necessary measures, and to submit any relevant legislation to the Committee to enable it to examine the effect given to the Convention in the country.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Rwanda

Legislation. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report and, while it notes with interest the adoption of Ministerial Order No. 01 of 17 May 2012 determining modalities for the establishment (or creation) and operation of occupational health and safety committees and Ministerial Order No. 02 of 17 May 2012 determining general conditions for occupational health and safety, it also notes that these orders do not include provisions to give effect to the majority of the Articles of this Convention. The Committee welcomes the Government's inclusion of translated copies of these new instruments in its report. The Government also indicates its intention to denounce this Convention and ratify the Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167). The Committee asks the Government to keep the Office informed of any developments in this respect, and to continue to provide information on any legislative changes undertaken concerning the application of the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. The Committee notes that sections 12, 28 and 38 of Ministerial Order No. 2 give effect to Article 10(3) and (4) and Article 16, and that while section 21 deals with hoists and lifts, it does not give full effect to the specific requirements of Articles 11 to 15. The Committee notes that the remaining Articles of the Convention are not addressed in the attached legislation. Recalling that Ordinance No. 21/94 of 23 July 1953 regulating occupational safety in the building industry was repealed in 2001, the Committee reiterates its request that the Government take urgent action to fill the legal void created by this abrogation. It again reminds the Government that the Office is available to provide relevant technical assistance to the Government to assist in its efforts to bring national law and practice into conformity with the Convention.

Articles 4 and 6, in conjunction with Part V of the report form. Labour inspection, statistical information and application in practice. The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government on the comprehensive exercise currently underway to establish a country profile on occupational safety and health. The Government indicates that this profile will provide statistical information in relation to the number and classification of accidents, including those relevant to workers in the informal economy. The Committee also refers the Government to its comments relating to the application of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81). Recalling that the most recent statistical information received from the Government in relation to the practical application of this Convention is dated from 2003, the Committee accordingly reminds the Government of its obligations under Article 6 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that its next report includes statistical information relating to the number and classification of accidents occurring to persons occupied in work within the scope of this Convention, and any other information relevant to the application of this Convention in practice.

Serbia

Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187) (ratification: 2009)

The Committee notes with interest the detailed information supplied in the Government's first report including the National Policy for Occupational Safety and Health, adopted by the Occupational Safety and Health Council on 20 April 2006, the Occupational Safety and Health Strategy (2009–12), the Action Plan for Implementation of the Occupational Safety and Health Strategy (2009–12), and the Law on Occupational Safety and Health of 21 November 2005. It notes in particular the commitment of the Government and the social partners to occupational safety and health issues and their efforts to develop a culture of prevention.

Article 4(1) and (2)(a) of the Convention. Obligation to establish, maintain, progressively develop and periodically review a national system for occupational safety and health, in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers. Legislation. The Committee notes that in accordance with the Action Plan for Implementation of the Occupational Safety and Health Strategy in the Republic of Serbia for 2009–12, a working group has been established to analyse the application of laws, by-laws and regulations, and to modify the Occupational Safety and Health Act in light of the EU acquis. The Committee also takes note of the comments of the Trade Union Confederation "Nezavishnot," transmitted by the Government, stating that the Act on Amendments and Supplements to the Health Insurance Act has not been submitted to either the Social and Economic Council for its opinion, or to the working group mentioned above. According to the union, pursuant to section 9 of the Act on Amendments and Supplements to the Health Insurance Act, occupational accidents have been redefined to exclude injuries that employees may suffer during their trip to or from work. The Committee calls the attention of the Government to Article 4(1) and (2)(a) of the Convention, which require consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers regarding, inter alia, laws and regulations on occupational safety and health. The Committee asks the Government to provide its comments on the communication from "Nezavishnot" and to take the appropriate measures to ensure that laws and regulations on occupational safety and health are developed and reviewed in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers. It also requests the Government to provide details on the mechanisms established for such consultations.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Sierra Leone

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

For a number of years, the Committee has drawn the attention of the Government to the fact that the national legislation does not contain provisions to give effect to Part II of the Convention (prohibition of the sale, hire, transfer in any other manner and exhibition of unguarded machinery) and that it does not provide for the full application of Article 17 of the Convention (which applies to all sectors of economic activity), as it is not applicable to certain branches of activity, inter alia, sea, air or land transport and mining.

Since 1979, in reply to the Committee's comments, the Government has indicated in its reports that a Bill to revise the 1974 Factories Act was being drafted and would contain provisions consistent with those of the Convention, and would apply to all the branches of economic activity. In its latest report (received in 1986), the Government indicates that the draft Factories Bill, 1985, has been examined by the competent parliamentary committee and is to be submitted to Parliament for adoption.

With its report for the period ending 30 June 1991, the Government supplied a copy of extracts of the Factories Bill containing provisions which should give effect to Part II of the Convention. In this connection, the Government was requested to indicate the stage of the legislative procedure reached by the Bill and the body which was in the process of examination of the Bill. Since no information has been provided by the Government in this respect, the Committee once again expresses the hope that the abovementioned Bill will be adopted in the near future and requests the Government to provide a copy of this text, once it has been adopted.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1984)

The Committee notes the Government's report received on 30 August 2012, a communication from the Independent Trade Union Alliance (ASI), received on 14 August 2012, and forwarded to the Government of 29 August 2012, and the Government's observations on that communication, received on 12 November 2012. The Committee notes that the ASI's communication refers essentially to labour inspection and it will examine it in the context of its examination of the application of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81). The Committee also notes that part of the ASI's communication refers to matters covered by the Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161), which has not been ratified by the country, and which cannot therefore be examined. Another part of the communication refers to the absence of consultation and the need to improve social dialogue in relation to occupational safety and health (OSH), and to dysfunctions and the need to improve coordination in the administrative structure, which are issues that the Committee has already examined and that it reviews once again in the present comment.

Articles 7. Reviews, either overall or in respect of particular areas, carried out at appropriate interval; 11(c). Establishment and application of procedures for the notification of occupational accidents; (e). Publication annually of information on measures taken, occupational accidents and occupational diseases, of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication by the ASI in 2010 that, according to the National Institute for Occupational Prevention, Safety and Health (INPSASEL), up to the third quarter of 2008, 68,119 serious morbidity accidents had been recorded, compared with 57,000 accidents recorded during the whole of 2007. It added that it is estimated that 90 per cent of occupational accidents are not reported. It also noted that, according to the ASI, INPSASEL would administer the OSH services in six sectors, and that it mentioned the petrochemical, oil, auto-parts and agricultural sectors. It further noted that in its 2011 communication, the ASI referred to the poor state of some installations belonging to the Venezuelan Petroleum Enterprise (PVDSA), adding that trade union leaders were urging the INPSASEL to assume the responsibility for and to supervise gas-filling plants throughout the country, and its observation that workers were not working in appropriate safety and health conditions. The Committee also noted that, according to a communication of the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV) of 2011, there had been an increase in occupational accidents in relation to ten years previously, due to a deterioration in the working environment. It added that there are no reliable statistics. Furthermore, according to the CTV, the petroleum industry is a case in point as accidents in the industry have increased dramatically over the past eight years and, according to a statement by the Secretary-General of the Federation of Petroleum Workers in August 2011, there were 500 occupational accidents in the industry and 15 deaths in 2011, and the PVDSA had dismissed workers involved in occupational accidents. With regard to the notification of accidents, the Committee noted the Government's indication concerning the procedure with the online reporting of accidents being in its first phase. The Government added that the INPSASEL posts on its web page information on occupational accidents which occurred during the 2005–07 period and on occupational diseases during the period 2002–06. In a communication received on 2 December 2011, the Government indicated that during the first half of 2011 a total of 29,020 occupational accidents and 1,130 occupational diseases had been reported, but did not provide information on previous years. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report in 2012 that 30,907 occupational accidents occurred during the first half of 2012, and that 1,328 occupational diseases were declared on the website of the INPSASEL. The Government adds that the INPSASEL is in the process of reviewing and approving the occupational accident statistics for 2008, 2009 and 2010. The Committee once again requests the Government to make efforts to update the information available on occupational accidents so as to have available effective indicators in due time which will allow it to identify the sectors requiring priority action, so that it is able to review its national policy on the basis of reliable and recent data. It requests the Government to provide information on this subject. Furthermore, noting that the Government has not provided some of the information requested in 2011 on the application of these Articles of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to: (1) send its comments on the issues related to the increase in the number of occupational accidents and their notification; (2) indicate the trends in relation to occupational accidents by sector and the measures adopted or envisaged to deal with them, including the situation in the PVDSA, referred to in the communication; (3) provide information on the reviews carried out or ongoing in specific sectors, as indicated in Article 7 of the Convention; and (4) indicate the sectoral committees to which it referred in its previous comment, and provide information on their operation and activities.

Article 9. Adequate and appropriate system of inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the measures adopted to guarantee the effective application of the preventive and protective measures established under the Convention including, but not exclusively, the strengthening of labour inspection. The Committee notes that, according to the report, the INPSASEL has formulated three new procedures for the strengthening of inspection systems: "comprehensive inspections", which adopt a preventive and pluri-disciplinary approach; "updating" actions, focusing on the investigation of occupational accidents and the causes of occupational diseases; and actions in the context of the "Comprehensive Agrarian Inspection Plan" (PIIA). The Committee will examine this information in greater detail in its comments on the application of Convention No. 81.

In 2011, the Committee requested the Government to reply in detail in 2012 to its observation of 2011. Noting that in 2012 the Government provided a brief report which does not contain replies to the various comments contained in its previous observation, the Committee is bound to reiterate those comments, which read as follows:

Articles 4 and 8 of the Convention. Formulating, implementing and periodically reviewing a coherent national policy on occupational safety, occupational health and the working environment; measures to give effect to this Article by consulting with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations concerned. The Committee notes that, according to the Government in its report, the principle of the people as participants is a constitutional right set forth in section 5 of the Basic Act on Prevention, Working Conditions and the Working Environment (LOPCYMAT) which gives effect to Article 4 of the Convention, and that draft legislation, regulations and technical standards are submitted for consultation among the various social partners. The Committee also notes that section 10 of the LOPCYMAT establishes that the Ministry of Labour shall consult the employers' and workers' organizations in respect of its national policy and that it will take into account, for the elaboration of this policy, inter alia, statistics on occupational diseases, accidents and deaths; the Government adds that section 36 of the same Act establishes a National Safety and Health Council with the participation of employers and workers. The Committee notes, however, that the Government has not provided information on the way in which this section of the Convention is applied in practice, indicating, for example, the content of its national policy and whether this policy and its implementing measures have been and are discussed with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations concerned. This implies a process of application and periodical revision in consultation with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations concerned, to ensure an evaluation of the national policy, the basis upon which the scope of future actions is determined. With respect to Article 8 of the Convention, the Government states that the Assembly puts into practice the so-called "parliamentarism of the street" which consists of discussing a number of bills with the citizens. It also points out that workers' assemblies, workshops with safety officers, meetings with trade union organizations and business associations of a number of productive groups are also held. Furthermore, the Committee notes that, in its comments of 2010, the CTV indicates that the National Institute for Occupational Prevention, Health and Safety (INPSASEL) does not consult the trade union organizations. The CTV adds that the Government should use the tripartite consultation mechanisms established under the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144), to improve the occupational safety and health conditions and reverse the present trend. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that Articles 4 and 8 of the Convention refer to consultations on national policy and ways to give effect to these, with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations concerned, and therefore discussions with the citizens does not replace consultations with the said organizations. The Committee requests the Government to send additional information on the content of its national policy; on the consultations held with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations concerned with respect to the formulation, application and evaluation of its national policy and the measures referred to under Article 8; and on the results of these consultations.

Article 5(e). Spheres of action that should be taken into account by national policy; the protection of workers and their representatives from disciplinary measures as a result of the actions properly taken by them in conformity with the policy referred to in Article 4 of this Convention. The Committee notes that, in accordance with section 44 of the LOPCYMAT, no safety delegate may be dismissed, transferred or demoted in his/her job, from the time he/she is elected until three months after the period for which he/she has been elected, without justified grounds previously approved by the labour inspectorate, in accordance with the Organic Labour Act. Noting that, according to the ASI communication in 2010, 400 safety delegates were dismissed at the end of the first quarter of 2008, the Committee requests the Government to indicate what its legislation considers "justified grounds" in the context of the said section; to send information on the application of this section in practice, including on the application of dismissal with "just grounds previously approved by the labour inspectorate in accordance with the Organic Labour Act", and on the alleged cases of dismissal of safety delegates.

Article 6. Functions and responsibilities. Article 15. Coordination. With respect to its comments in 2009, in which the Committee noted that, according to the CTV, the LOPCYMAT had not as yet been fully implemented and the Social Security Fund was not yet in operation, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, it is untrue that the LOPCYMAT is not yet functioning. The Governing points out that in the context of the transition of the social security institutions, certain legal situations of occupational safety and health (OSH) fall within the remit of the Venezuelan Social Security Institute (IVSS); that the entry into force of the Social Security Fund will enable the remaining aspects to come into effect; however, there has not been a deterioration or vacuum with respect to situations regulated by previous laws and regulations. The Committee also notes that, according to the ASI's communication of 2010, another delay with the LOPCYMAT is connected to the appointment of special prosecutors for occupational safety and health matters. In turn, the Committee notes that the Government has not provided the information requested in its previous comment on the difficulties encountered in formally setting up the National Council for Occupational, Safety and Health, to which section 36 of the LOPCYMAT refers. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the National Council for Occupational, Safety and Health is operating and to send information on which aspects and bodies governed by the LOPCYMAT are functioning in practice, and those which are not, as well as the Government's plans to implement the Act in its totality.

Other issues. Article 5. Spheres of action that should be taken into account in national policy; Article 11(a)(b) and (d). Functions that should be covered by national policy; Article 12. Obligations on persons who design, manufacture, import, provide or transfer machinery, equipment or substances for occupational use; and Article 15. Coherence of the national policy and coordination between the various authorities and bodies responsible for giving effect to Parts II and III of the present Convention. Noting that the Government has not, in its report, provided information on the application of the above Articles, the Committee requests the Government to send information in this respect.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to adopt the necessary measures in the near future.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 13 (Comoros, Guinea); Convention No. 45 (Guyana, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Uganda); Convention No. 62 (Guinea, Ireland); Convention No. 115 (Ghana, Guyana, Kyrgyzstan); Convention No. 119 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Ghana, Iraq, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan); Convention No. 120 (France: New Caledonia, Slovakia, Tajikistan); Convention No. 127 (Algeria, India); Convention No. 136 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Guyana); Convention No. 139 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Guyana, Ireland, Slovakia); Convention No. 148 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Malta, San Marino, Slovakia, Tajikistan); Convention No. 155 (Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Australia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cape Verde, China, Ireland, Mexico, Tajikistan); Convention No. 161 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Chile, Guatemala, Slovakia); Convention No. 162 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Canada, Colombia); Convention No. 167 (China, Serbia, Slovakia); Convention No. 170 (Burkina Faso, China, Syrian Arab Republic); Convention No. 174 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, India); Convention No. 176 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Ireland, Slovakia, Zambia); Convention No. 184 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burkina Faso); Convention No. 187 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Germany, Serbia, Slovakia).

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention (Revised), 1934 (No. 42) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government has sent detailed information showing that the national legislation gives substantial effect to the Convention but without replying to the questions which have been posed by the Committee for many years. The Committee therefore requests the Government, in accordance with section 4 of the Inter-Ministerial Order of 10 April 1995, to include in the work programme of the Commission on Occupational Diseases, the question of bringing the schedules of occupational diseases into conformity with the Convention with respect to the following points:

- the activities in which there is a risk of exposure to anthrax infection should also include the loading, unloading or transport of merchandise in general so as to cover workers (such as dockworkers) who have unknowingly transported merchandise that has been contaminated by anthrax spores;
- the wording of the items pertaining to poisoning by arsenic (Schedules Nos 20 and 21), manifestations caused by the halogen derivatives of hydrocarbons of the aliphatic series (Schedules Nos 3, 11, 12, 26 and 27), and poisoning by phosphorus and certain of its compounds (Schedules Nos 5 and 34) must, pursuant to the schedule annexed to the Convention, cover in general terms all the manifestations that may be caused by the above substances (such a wording would also make it possible to cover diseases which may be caused by the use of new products); and
- the need for the wording of the various pathological manifestations enumerated in the left-hand column of the schedules of occupational diseases entitled “designation of diseases” to be of an indicative nature, in the same way as the wording for the corresponding types of work in the right-hand column of the schedules.

Antigua and Barbuda

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1983)

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government intends to review the entire Workmen's Compensation Ordinance No. 24 of 1956 which is the central piece of legislation giving effect to the Convention, and that first contacts have been established with the Office in order to receive technical assistance in this respect. Recalling that the Government has been expressing its will to reform this Ordinance since 1986, the Committee hopes that, in collaboration with the ILO, the Government will be able to develop a comprehensive and coherent system of accident compensation that will give full application to the following provisions of the Convention:

- Article 5 of the Convention (Compensation in the form of a lump sum). Section 8 of the Ordinance should be amended so as to ensure that the compensation due in the event of accidents causing permanent incapacity shall be paid in the form of periodical payments, or exceptionally in a lump sum only if the competent authority is satisfied that it will be properly utilized.
- Article 7 (Additional compensation for assistance by a third person). Section 9 of the above Ordinance should be amended so as to grant additional compensation for victims of injuries who need the assistance of a third person in cases of permanent incapacity.
- Article 9 (Medical and pharmaceutical treatment). Section 6(3) of the Ordinance should be amended so as not to prescribe any limit to the expenses and costs of medical treatment undergone by a worker as a result of an occupational accident for which the employer is responsible and include an express provision for coverage of related surgical and pharmaceutical costs.
- Article 10 (Provision of surgical appliances and artificial limbs in general). Section 10 of the Ordinance should be amended to provide for surgical appliances and artificial limbs in all cases in which they are necessary, and not only with a view to improving the earning capacity of the person concerned.

Argentina

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1950)

The Committee notes the Government's report, which contains a reply to the Committee's direct request of 2007, as well as the observations on the Government's report submitted by the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA) received on 31 August 2012 and 7 September 2012 and by the General Confederation of Labour (CGT) received on 21 September 2012.

Legislative amendments. The Committee notes that both the CTA and the CGT call for a comprehensive and substantial reform of Act No. 24.557 on occupational risks (LRT) of 1995. The CGT underlines the LRT's lack of adherence to the national Constitution and the inequality of its reparatory system. The union calls for a more comprehensive law, which would include all occupational diseases and accidents and puts forward a list of solutions that should be addressed, namely: assistance of workers by legal counsel or by a member of the worker's union before system-specific commissions; unification of criteria used by the medical commissions; amending the criminal code by establishing system-specific penalties; offering the option of lump-sum payments in case of total permanent invalidity; joint liability of the private entities responsible for repairing occupational risks (ART) where employers omitted to communicate to the authorities, knowingly or unknowingly, breaches of hygiene and safety rules which resulted in injuries and prejudice to the workers; mandatory coverage by ART of all work-related contingencies until the medical commission can mediate and there is full compensation of the damage. The CTA deems that ARTs pursue profit-oriented objectives and are therefore interested in reducing the reparations awarded to victims of occupational injuries. The CTA also underlines that the list of occupational diseases included in the LRT is closed and exhaustive, leading to the exclusion of a number of occupational diseases, recognized as such by national courts, and that the problem is aggravated by the absence of a judicial mechanism to review the decisions taken by the Central Medical Commission regarding the application for benefits in cases of occupational accidents and diseases. Given that a worker's only capital is their labour force, the CTA asserts the need to fully compensate a worker's physical and mental injury and considers that future legislation should be based on the concept of the full reparation of work injuries, referring in this respect to the guidelines set by the Supreme Court.

With regard to the trade unions' call for reforming the workmen's compensation legislation in Argentina, the Committee understands that in October 2012, Act No. 26773 on compensation for damages as a result of employment injury was adopted and that it revises certain aspects of Act No. 24.557. The Committee requests the Government to reply to the comments of the CTA and the CGT and to indicate how current legislation as a whole gives effect to the obligations contained in the various provisions in the Convention.

Article 2 of the Convention. Scope of application. In the comments of 31 August 2012, the CTA denounced the lack of automatic access to medical aid by non-registered workers due to the fact that insurance companies receiving their claims do not have them listed as workers with the employers with whom these insurance companies have agreements. In consequence, non-registered workers have to remedy work-related illnesses and accidents at their own expense. Recalling that the Convention covers all workers, employees and apprentices, the Committee asks the Government to explain in detail how the Convention is applied to workers who are not registered by employers; who guarantees these workers compensation and payment of medical expenses in case of occupational accidents; and what penalties are imposed on the employers who fail to comply with the obligation to insure their workers against occupational accidents.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention (Revised), 1934 (No. 42) (ratification: 1950)

Review of the national list of occupational diseases. With reference to its previous observation, the Committee takes note of the comments brought forward by the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA) received on 31 August 2012 indicating that the current list of occupational diseases of Act No. 24.557 is too restrictive and violates the Convention by discarding all diseases that do not meet the triple criteria of the concurrence of listed risk agents, pathological symptoms, and occupational exposure and thus obliging the worker to provide proof of the concurrence of these three factors in order to receive compensation. In comparison, the Convention sets forth a schedule by reference to the concurrence of only two factors and establishes a presumption of occupational diseases when listed diseases and toxic substances affect workers engaged in the corresponding trades, industries or processes. The Committee therefore requests the Government to review the current list of occupational diseases in accordance with the Convention's aim of relieving workers in the trades and industries listed from the burden of proving that they actually have been exposed to the risk of the disease in question. The Government should also change from restrictive to indicative the enumeration of the pathological symptoms resulting from exposure to the corresponding substances given in the left hand column of the list of occupational diseases in Decree 658/96.

In addition to the above conceptual changes to the recognition of occupational diseases, the Committee once again urges the Government to take concrete measures to improve the current list on the following points:

- include the addition of the loading, unloading or transport of merchandise in general to the activities likely to cause anthrax;
- decrease the requirement of exposure of at least ten years in regard to primary epitheliomatous cancer of the skin in accordance with the World Health Organization's (WHO) findings which showed that skin cancers can appear already after five years of exposure; and

- make an express reference to silicosis with or without pulmonary tuberculosis, if necessary with a reservation that the silicosis must be a determining factor in the incapacity or death, as provided in the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the abovementioned issues will be taken into consideration in the context of the modifications and amendments to Act No. 24.557 currently being prepared for submission to Parliament. The Committee notes however that Act No. 26.773, adopted in October 2012, does not address the abovementioned issues. In this context, the Committee asks the Government to indicate in its next report the measures which will allow the national legislation to be brought in conformity with the obligations under the Convention. The Committee hopes that the Government will be able to indicate substantial progress made on these issues.

The Committee further notes that the CTA refers in its comments to various decisions of the Supreme Court of Justice which have declared unconstitutional certain provisions of Act No. 24.557 regarding the procedures of recognition and compensation of occupational diseases. The Committee asks the Government to supply copies of these decisions and to explain their impact on the application of the corresponding provisions of the Convention in law and in practice.

Bangladesh

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in national law and practice. According to the information supplied by the Government in its reports under Conventions Nos 18, 19 and 118, the country faces major challenges in securing the constitutional right to social security as the coverage and support of social security schemes encounter difficulties in bringing the beneficiaries above the poverty line due to resource constraints. The Office of the Chief Inspector of Factories and Establishments (DIFE), responsible for enforcing the legal provisions relating to inspection of working conditions and filing judicial complaints against employers, is under-staffed and so far has not been notified of any cases of occupational disease. Steps are, however, currently being taken with a view to framing the rules implementing section 82 of the Labour Act of 2006, which establishes the forms and time limits for the notification of occupational diseases by the employers. While also emphasizing the lack of human resources within the DIFE, the Bangladesh Employers' Federation (BEF) calls on the Government to strengthen the DIFE and considers that it could benefit from technical assistance in the formulation of technical rules concerning notification of occupational diseases.

Taking note of the above, the Committee expresses the hope that the Government will be able to soon finalize and adopt the regulations establishing the procedure for the prompt and effective notification of occupational diseases under section 82 of the Labour Act of 2006. It also hopes that measures will be taken with a view to strengthening the operational capacities of the DIFE. In this context, the Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

Barbados

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1972)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 65, paragraph 10. Adjustment of survivors' benefits. In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government states in its report that it has introduced in 2005 a new method of annual indexation of benefits and insurable earnings, the upper limit of the latter being increased in line with national average wage increases. Benefits are increased by the same percentage as the lesser of the three-year average of wage or price increases, subject to actuarial advice on the maximum which may be granted so as to maintain the target reserve ratio of five times, through to the year 2030. The 12th actuarial review of the national insurance scheme indicates in this respect that in 2005, year of introduction of indexation, pensions were increased by 4.76 per cent, while the insured earnings ceiling was increased by 2.9 per cent. The Committee invites the Government to supply with its next report the information requested by the report form under Title VI of Article 65.

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1974)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 5 of the Convention. Payment of benefits abroad. With reference to its 2008 observation, the Committee notes that, in its report of 2009, the Government provided information on the pensions in payment under the reciprocal agreements concluded with Canada, Quebec, the United Kingdom and the member countries of CARICOM. The Committee notes, however, that the Government's report did not reply on the other issues raised in the observation, particularly as regards the Government's indication in 2005 of the planned adoption of a draft bill amending the national legislation so as to comply with Article 5 of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide in its next report due in 2012 all the information requested in the Committee's previous observation on the following points.

The Committee recalls that section 49 (in conjunction with section 48) of the National Insurance and Social Security (Benefits) Regulations of 1967 and section 25 of the Employment Injury (Benefits) Regulations of 1970 deprive a beneficiary residing abroad of the right to ask for the benefit to be paid directly to him at his place of residence, which is contrary to the provisions of Article 5 of the Convention. In its previous report of 2002, the Government stated that approval has been given for direct payment of the benefits in the country where the claimant is currently residing, that corresponding amendments of the National Insurance and Social Security Act were approved by the Government to bring it in accordance with Article 5 of the Convention, and that the procedural steps were taken to submit these amendments to Parliament for enactment. In its report, received in June 2005, the Government indicated that a draft bill had been prepared for benefits to be paid to persons residing abroad and that a copy of the new provisions would be forwarded to the ILO as soon as they were adopted by Parliament.

The Committee recalls that, in granting equality of treatment for residents of the contracting parties under their social security legislation, the CARICOM Agreement on Social Security ensures protection and maintenance of the rights of beneficiaries “notwithstanding changes of residence among their respective territories – principles which underlie several of the Conventions of the International Labour Organization” (Preamble). The Committee wishes to recall in this respect that, in accordance with the principle of the maintenance of rights through the provision of benefits abroad, as established by Convention No. 118, Barbados shall guarantee direct payment of the benefits to all entitled beneficiaries at their place of residence, irrespective of the country in which they reside and even in the absence of a bilateral or multilateral agreement to that effect. The Committee trusts that the Government will make every effort to ensure that the bill is adopted in the very near future so as to ensure direct payment at their place of residence abroad of old-age, survivors’ and employment injury benefits, both to its own nationals and to nationals of any other Member that has accepted the obligations of the Convention in respect of these branches. The Committee hopes that the Government’s next report will contain a copy of the new provisions together with detailed statistics on the transfer of benefits abroad to beneficiaries, including Barbadian nationals, who are not covered by the CARICOM Agreement or bilateral agreements with Canada and the United Kingdom.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Invalidity, Old-Age and Survivors’ Benefits Convention, 1967 (No. 128) (ratification: 1972)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 29. Adjustment of invalidity and old-age benefits. In its previous reports, the Government had indicated that pensions were reviewed on an ad hoc basis, but that it was considering introducing a method of annual indexation as a means to increase periodical payments. The Committee invites the Government to supply with its next report the information requested by the report form under Article 29.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

Invalidity, Old-Age and Survivors’ Benefits Convention, 1967 (No. 128) (ratification: 1977)

With reference to its previous observation concerning the application of the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), the Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121), Convention No. 128, and the Medical Care and Sickness Benefits Convention, 1969 (No. 130), the Committee notes that it has only received the report for Convention No. 128. The Committee trusts that the Government will not fail to provide the remaining reports in 2013, along with its reply to the present observation. The provision of those reports will enable the Committee to have an overview of the development of the Bolivian Social Security System.

Restructuring of the pension system. The Committee notes with interest the creation by Act No. 065 of 2010 of the solidarity pension intended, in the context of the new semi-contributory scheme, to increase the level of the pensions of workers with low incomes through a solidarity fund financed in part by the employers’ solidarity contribution and by contributions from insured persons with higher incomes. It also notes with interest the consolidation of the dignity allowance which guarantees to all nationals of Bolivia over 60 years of age who are resident in the country a minimum non-contributory income. The Committee observes that these measures strengthen the application of the principle of solidarity, defined as one of the essential principles of long-term social security in section 3 of Act No. 065. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the functioning of the solidarity pension and the dignity allowance, with an indication in particular of the number of beneficiaries and the amount of the benefits provided.

With regard to the contributory old-age pension scheme, financed through the contributions of insured persons to their individual accounts, the Committee notes that the Public Long-Term Social Security Administration will replace the pension fund administrators for the administration and management of the scheme. The Administration will be under the supervision of the Pensions and Insurance Social Inspection and Control Authority, which replaces the Pension Inspection and Control Authority. The Committee observes that, in contrast with the previous situation in which the Inspection Authority enjoyed autonomy, the new entity is under the supervision of the Ministry of the Economy and Public Finance, and that the Authority’s decisions can be challenged through hierarchical appeal procedures. The Committee invites the Government to indicate the objectives of these changes in the administration and inspection of the pension system.

The Committee also observes that Act No. 065 changes the conditions for entitlement to the old-age pension, in particular allowing access to the old-age pension as from 58 years of age for persons who have paid contributions for a minimum of ten years. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the financial situation of the contributory scheme, and on the replacement rate that it is hoped that pensions will attain once the minimum period of ten years of contribution has been completed.

Extension of the pension scheme. In its previous observation, the Committee emphasized the low-level of coverage of the pension and health schemes, indicating that it appeared necessary to take measures to adapt the Bolivian social security model to the economic and social situation of the country, in which informal self-employment is predominant. The Committee understands that the various innovations introduced by Act No. 065 are intended to extend the level of coverage of pensions. While noting that for most self-employed workers coverage by the social security system remains voluntary, the Committee notes that coverage is compulsory for self-employed consultants and insured persons, in accordance with section 101 of the Act. It also understands that the creation of the solidarity pension could provide an incentive for low-income workers, both dependent and self-employed, to affiliate with the scheme. The Committee also notes with interest the strengthening by Act No. 065 of administrative sanctions in the event of delays in the payment of contributions and the establishment of penal sanctions for the misappropriation of contributions by employers. So as to be able to assess the impact of the various measures referred to on the level of coverage of the pension scheme, the Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the number of insured persons contributing to the overall pension system, with an indication of the number of self-employed workers, as well as data on the sanctions imposed for failure to pay contributions.

Noting that the Government's report does not contain replies to the questions in the report form requesting statistics on the coverage of invalidity, old-age and survivors' pensions, the Committee wishes to recall that the fact that the Government has availed itself of the temporary exceptions set out in Articles 9, 13, 16, 22 and 38 of the Convention does not relieve it of the obligation to provide information on the level of coverage of its pension system.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

Burkina Faso

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1969)

Article 2 of the Convention. Application of occupational accident legislation to temporary and casual workers. The Committee notes with satisfaction Order No. 2008-008/MTSS/SG/DGPS, Chapter IV of which establishes particular provisions relating to the affiliation of casual and temporary workers and day labourers to the National Social Security Fund. The Committee notes the Government's statement that, under the terms of the abovementioned Order, the categories of workers referred to in it are entitled to all benefits relating to occupational accidents and occupational diseases in the same manner as permanent workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the number of casual and temporary workers and day labourers affiliated to the National Social Security Fund, and to continue to supply statistics relating to the application of the Convention in practice.

List of occupational diseases. The Committee notes the Government's statement concerning its participation in the ongoing process of reviewing and harmonizing the national list of occupational diseases in the area covered by the Inter-African Conference on Social Security (CIPRES). It also notes that, in order to be able to comply with these lists, Decree No. 355-1996 on occupational diseases recognized in Burkina Faso will be revised as soon as the CIPRES has adopted its conclusions on this matter. The Committee notes that many member States of CIPRES, including Burkina Faso, have ratified a number of ILO Conventions concerning occupational diseases, such as Convention No. 18, the Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention (Revised), 1934 (No. 42), and the Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121). The Committee recalls that Members taking part in regional processes to integrate or harmonize their national laws remain bound by the obligations under the ILO Conventions they have ratified and must therefore ensure that the decisions adopted at regional level allow them to respect their international commitments. In this respect, the Committee hopes that the Government will be able in the near future to inform the Committee of the revision of Decree No. 355-1996 that will include, as requested in its previous comments, a full reference to anthrax infection and all the poisonings caused by lead and mercury, their allies, amalgams and compounds. Finally, the Committee draws the Government's and Office's attention to the interest that might lie in developing cooperation between CIPRES and the International Labour Organization, especially to ensure that when harmonizing the schedules of occupational diseases, the content of the revised Schedule I of Convention No. 121 [Schedule I amended in 1980], and the List of Occupational Diseases Recommendation, 2002 (No. 194), is taken into account.

Practical application of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide in its next report statistical information on the number of occupational diseases recorded and on the corresponding amount of compensation paid.

Cape Verde

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1987)

Branch (g) (Employment injury benefit). Articles 3 and 4 (equality of treatment without conditions of residence) and Article 5 (payment of benefits abroad) of the Convention. In reply to the issues raised previously under the Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19), and Convention No. 118, the Government, in its report received in August 2012, reiterates that a reform of the national legislation in respect of industrial accidents and occupational diseases is to be undertaken in consultation with the social partners. In the meantime, the Decree Law No. 84/78, as subsequently modified, which governs industrial accidents and occupational diseases, remains applicable. While recognizing that the latter is not fully in conformity with international obligations assumed by Cape Verde, the Government once again stresses that the newly adopted Labour Code does establish, as a fundamental principle of labour law, the right of all workers without distinction to compensation in case of accidents at work. As the Committee pointed out in its previous observation, the reciprocity condition for equality of treatment of foreign nationals and their dependants with Cape Verde nationals contained in section 3(3) of the Decree Law runs counter to this principle. The Committee hopes that the provision subjecting equality of treatment to a reciprocity condition will soon be repealed, and that the future reform of the legislation concerning employment injury compensation will permit the Government to introduce specific provisions guaranteeing the payment of pensions in case of residence abroad as well as equality of treatment for refugees and stateless persons. Noting that the situation in respect of issues raised previously remains unchanged, the Committee cannot but express the hope that the necessary amendments to the legislation on employment injuries will be made shortly.

Part V of the report form. Compliance with national legislation in sectors employing high rates of foreign workers. The Committee notes the Government's reply to the comments made in 2010 by the Cape Verde Confederation of Free Trade Unions (CCSL) concerning in particular coordination mechanisms existing under the national immigration strategy aimed at providing institutions with guidance and tools for implementing immigration management policy. The Committee would like the Government to indicate the results achieved in ensuring better compliance with the obligation of employers under the new Labour Code to insure all workers against industrial accidents, with a particular emphasis on sectors employing a high number of foreign workers.

The Committee notes the Government's reply to its previous request for statistical information on occupational accidents under Convention No. 19. The Government's data refers to 202 accidents at work officially recorded in 2011, with the highest proportion in the construction sector (33.17 per cent). Because this data does not include any breakdown for foreign workers employed in the country, the Committee again requests that the Government indicate as far as possible the number and nationality of foreign workers employed in the country and the number of those involved in accidents, particularly in the construction sector.

Central African Republic

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention, 1925 (No. 18) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Absence in the country of legislation covering occupational diseases. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its last report, in the same way as in previous reports, that the occupational disease branch is not covered by the Central African Social Security Office. It also indicated previously that it did not have precise information on the manner in which occupational diseases are compensated, as their coverage is established through collective agreements, since the legislation on these matters is not applicable.

While taking due note of this information, the Committee is bound once again to express concern at the continued failure to give effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee recalls that by ratifying the Convention the Government undertook, firstly, to ensure that compensation shall be payable to workers incapacitated by occupational diseases or to their dependants in accordance with the general principles of the national legislation relating to compensation for industrial accidents, in accordance with Article 1 of the Convention and, secondly, to consider as occupational diseases those diseases and poisonings produced by the substances set forth in the Schedule appended to the Convention, in accordance with Article 2. Under these conditions, the Committee trusts that the Government will take all the necessary measures without further ado to ensure the compensation guaranteed by the Convention to workers affected by occupational diseases recognized by the Convention or their dependants.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government which were received in September 2006 and May 2007, according to which, in general terms, Convention No. 118 is barely being applied owing to budgetary problems and no national legislation is ready to be enacted in this area. The Government indicates that equality of treatment with regard to the granting of benefits is subject, contrary to Article 4, paragraph 1, of the Convention, to the condition of residence of foreign nationals on the national territory. With regard to the payment of benefits abroad provided for by Article 5, paragraph 1, of the Convention, the Government indicates that no indemnity or benefit is paid when the beneficiary resides abroad, except in the case of persons appointed to an embassy or a representation of an undertaking whose headquarters are located in the Central African Republic. The granting of family allowances is made on condition that the children reside on the national territory, which is contrary to Article 6 of the Convention. Finally, no multilateral or bilateral social security agreement has been concluded with the member States to comply with the requirements of Articles 7 and 8 of the Convention, since the Central African Republic does not participate in any system of rights preservation. However, the Government points out that it has undertaken a far-reaching reform of national social legislation, including social security legislation, which takes account in particular of the Committee's observations concerning the application of Conventions Nos 18, 117 and 118.

The Committee notes with regret that, since the ratification of the Convention in 1964, the Government has not managed to take the necessary measures to give effect to the principal provisions of the Convention, notwithstanding the persistent observations of the ILO supervisory bodies. It trusts, however, that in the context of the reform of the social sector announced in the report, the Government will be able to make specific amendments to the national legislation in order to bring it into full conformity with the Convention, requesting technical assistance from the ILO if necessary. The Committee once again indicates in detail the amendments in question in a direct request to the Government. Finally, it would be grateful if the Government would send it a copy of the new Social Security Code, enacted by Act No. 06035 of 28 December 2006, and to indicate how this takes account, in particular, of the Committee's observations concerning the application of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Chile

Sickness Insurance (Agriculture) Convention, 1927 (No. 25) (ratification: 1931)

Article 7(1) of the Convention. Continuous failure to apply core provision of the Convention. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that the national legislation is not in compliance with a basic principle established by Convention No. 24, that workers and employers shall share in providing the financial resources of the sickness insurance scheme. In Chile, all social contributions, with the exception of those for the employment injury compensation scheme, have been payable by workers since the adoption of Legislative Decree No. 3501 of 1980.

While it acknowledges the extensive information supplied by the Government in its latest report regarding the financing and operation of the employment injury scheme financed exclusively by the employers, the Committee is bound to observe that employment injury issues are not addressed by the present Convention and are dealt with under the Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121), also ratified by Chile. The Committee regrets that the report does not express any intention of seeking ways to finance the sickness insurance system through joint contributions of employers and insured persons so as to give effect, in national laws and regulations, to the requirements of Article 7(1). The Committee wishes to emphasize that failure to comply with the principle of the collective financing of social security in the health insurance branch, as in the pensions branch, makes the system socially unjust for workers and therefore incompatible with the objectives of international labour standards in relation to social security. The Committee asks the Government to reconsider the situation in consultation with the social partners and to indicate in its next report how it intends to give effect to its obligations under Article 7(1) of the Convention.

Old-Age Insurance (Industry, etc.) Convention, 1933 (No. 35) (ratification: 1935)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Tripartite Committees. Representations made in 1986 and 2000 under article 24 of the ILO Constitution by the National Trade Union Coordinating Council (CNS) and a number of national trade unions of workers of the Private Sector Pension Funds (AFPs)

The Committee recalls that the non-observance by Chile of this Convention and the Invalidity Insurance (Industry, etc.) Convention, 1933 (No. 37), following the reform of the pension system in 1980, has been recognized for many years. This issue has given rise to two representation procedures under article 24 of the ILO Constitution in 1986 and 2000. In both cases, the Governing Body concluded that the Conventions in question were not complied with and called upon the Government to amend the national legislation to ensure that the privately managed pension scheme established by Legislative Decree No. 3.500 of 1980 be administered by non-profit-making organizations; that representatives of the insured are able to participate in the administration of the system; and that employers contribute to the financing of the old-age and invalidity benefits.

In its latest report, the Government does not refer to any amendments made to the private pension scheme which are likely to give effect to the abovementioned recommendations. For the most part, the Government provides information on the repercussions of Act No. 20.255 of 2008 on the Chilean social insurance scheme. The Committee notes that the reform of 2008, apart from the fact that it established a minimum pension scheme subject to a means test funded by the state budget, did not change the basic characteristics of the private pension scheme, in so far as, inter alia, the latter does not guarantee a defined benefit throughout the contingency and excludes the representatives of insured persons from participating in the administration of the pension fund. The social pensions based on the principle of solidarity established under Act No. 20.255 are non-contributory old-age and invalidity benefits paid to persons who are not entitled to a pension under other old-age insurance schemes, and who belong to the 60 per cent of the poorest households in the country. In this respect, these benefits cannot be considered as old-age and invalidity benefits in the context of Conventions Nos 35, 36, 37 and 38, as these Conventions provide for defined contributory benefits paid by old-age or invalidity insurance schemes. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the possibility of carrying out an evaluation – by having recourse if necessary to ILO technical assistance – of the conformity of the solidarity-based pillar created under Act No. 20.255 with the requirements of Part V (Old-age benefit) and IX (Invalidity benefit) of the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), which make it possible to give effect to these provisions by providing benefits to all residents whose means during the contingency do not exceed prescribed limits.

Communication submitted by the National Association of Public Employees (ANEF), the Association of Employees of the Women's National Service, the College of Teachers of Chile AG, the National Confederation of Business and Services, and the Confederation of Unions in the Banking and Financial Sectors of Chile. The Committee notes the information sent by ANEF, the Association of Employees of the Women's National Service, the College of Teachers of Chile AG, the National Confederation of Business and Services and the Confederation of Unions in the Banking and Financial Sectors of Chile, which was received at the Office on 15 September 2011. According to these organizations, the private pension scheme based on a funded pension plan results in discrimination against women in so far as it is based on sex-distinct mortality tables. This means that a man and woman with exactly the same amount in their capital accumulation accounts when they retire will receive different pensions entirely on account of their gender. In its reply, the Government states that the use of sex-distinct mortality tables to calculate men's and women's pensions is justified because women have a higher life expectancy. Using unisex tables would undoubtedly increase the pension level of women, but it would result in the available capital in women's capital accumulation accounts being depleted more quickly. The Presidential Advisory Council for the pension scheme reform carried out studies on the introduction of unisex mortality tables and rejected this possibility for a number of reasons, among which: the risk that the insurance companies' reserves might be inadequate; a reform of this nature would imply cross-subsidization between men and women: the lack of a comparative basis at international level, since no other country with a funded pension scheme has introduced unisex tables.

The Committee notes that the disparity between the pensions paid to men and women under the private pension scheme is a direct consequence of the nature of the system based on the capital accumulation retirement accounts of the beneficiaries. The Committee notes in this respect that, more than 30 years ago, the Supreme Court of the United States already considered that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 banned a contribution differential on the basis of sex in the context of a pension plan (City of Los Angeles v. Manhart, 435 U.S. 702, 98 S. Ct. 1370 (1978)). The Committee also notes that in 2011 the European Court of Justice ruled that different insurance premiums for women and men constituted sex discrimination and was not compatible with the Charter of Fundamental Rights (Test-Achats Case (C-236/09)). The Committee is also of the understanding that, in a resolution adopted in 2010, the Constitutional Court of Chile ruled that a gender criterion in risk factor tables used in the private insurance health scheme was unconstitutional (section 38 of Act No. 18.933 (Isapres)). In view of the preceding considerations, the Committee invites the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office so that it might study in greater detail the implications of using unisex mortality tables on women's pensions and the ways to offset the negative effects caused by this practice.

Communication submitted by the National Confederation of Municipal Employees of Chile (ASEMUCH). In a communication received on 30 May 2011, ASEMUCH considered that the remuneration taken into account to compute the pensions of municipal employees within the meaning of Legislative Decree No. 3.501 had unjustly been restricted to their basic wage, excluding a number of other components of their remuneration in the calculations, and had therefore violated Conventions Nos 35 and 37. According to ASEMUCH, taking into account only the basic wage for calculating the pension results from a misinterpretation of the term "in the portion subject to taxation" contained in section 2 of legislative Decree No. 3.501, which is taken to be synonymous with the term "remunerations subject to taxation". This interpretation is not consistent with section 5 of the abovementioned Decree, under which social insurance contributions are not paid on the total remuneration, considering that the portion that exceeds 50 times the monthly living wage is exonerated from contributions. ASEMUCH maintains that this restrictive interpretation of remuneration considered for pension purposes has resulted in reducing the level of contributions, the amount of funds constituted for pension purposes and, consequently, has also reduced the level of old-age and invalidity pensions paid to retirees. In its report received by the Office on 21 September 2012, the Government states that the reply to comments from ASEMUCH is still being prepared by the Court of Accounts (Contraloría General de la República), in cooperation with the Under-Secretariat of Social Welfare and the authority responsible for monitoring pensions (Superintendencia de Pensiones), and will be sent as soon as it is available.

The Committee notes that the comments from ASEMUCH concern the damages incurred by the social security system, as a result of the failure to take into account certain components of municipal workers' pay apart from the basic wage when calculating old-age and invalidity contributions. It notes, in the light of the information submitted by ASEMUCH, that these components of municipal workers' remuneration which are not subject to old-age and invalidity contributions are taxed in some cases and not in others. Without pre-empting the information that the Government might send in its forthcoming reply, the Committee recalls that, in the context of recent procedures under article 24 of the Constitution (see GB.298/15/6), of which it assumes the follow-up, the ILO Governing Body adopted the conclusions of the Tripartite Committee set up to examine the representation, concluding that the Government was directly responsible for the financial and moral prejudice suffered by the categories of workers concerned. In this particular case, the fact that these components of remuneration were indeed due to the municipal workers is not questioned; they seem moreover to have been collected by the municipal employees, but they were not included in the contribution base as regards old-age and invalidity insurance. On this matter, the Committee would like to recall that under Article 7(3) of the Convention, when contributions are graded according to remuneration, the remuneration taken into account for this purpose shall also be taken into account for the purpose of computing the pension. Furthermore, according to Article 10(5) of the Convention, the public authorities are responsible for the administrative and financial supervision to ensure the proper running of the old-age and invalidity insurance scheme. This responsibility also includes that of ensuring that all the rights and obligations of the parties are respected and that all contributions due which have been or should have been collected, have indeed been collected effectively. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide detailed explanations on the matter and to indicate whether it has fulfilled the obligation incumbent upon it to guarantee the effective payment of all old-age and invalidity contributions due.

Invalidity Insurance (Industry, etc.) Convention, 1933 (No. 37)
(ratification: 1935)

The Committee invites the Government to refer to the comments made under the Old-Age Insurance (Industry, etc.) Convention, 1933 (No. 35).

Colombia

Workmen's Compensation (Agriculture) Convention, 1921 (No. 12)
(ratification: 1933)

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17)
(ratification: 1933)

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention, 1925 (No. 18) (ratification: 1933)

The Committee notes the Government's report of 30 August 2012 and the various comments supplied by the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT), the National Business Association of Colombia (ANDI), and the General Confederation of Labour (CGT), respectively of 31 August, 3 September and 5 September 2012.

Article 2(1) of Convention No. 17. Coverage. The Committee notes with interest that following the adoption of Law No. 1562 of 11 July 2012 amending the Vocational Risk System and other provisions concerning occupational health, the personal scope of the Occupational Risks System (SGRL) was extended. The new law incorporates the previous system of vocational risks into the new SGRL and extends compulsory affiliation to several groups of employees, including independent contractors with more than one month contract, the worker-members of cooperatives and pre-cooperatives and self-employed workers in high-risk activities. Moreover, the law provides for voluntary membership of informal workers. According to the Government's report, in March 2012, 8,126,344 dependent workers and 243,165 self-employed workers were affiliated to the SGRL, compared with 6,633,833 and 73,800, respectively, in December 2009. Forty-one per cent of the active population would therefore currently be covered by the SGRL. For its part, the CUT stresses that with only 8.72 per cent of the workers covered by the SGRL, the level enrolment in agriculture is still extremely low. In order to be able to evaluate the impact of the new legislation regarding insurance coverage against occupational risks, the Committee invites the Government to continue providing statistics on the number of SGRL affiliates, including information specifically on the construction and agricultural sectors. Additionally, the Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report how Law No. 1562 and its implementing regulations define informal workers and the rights of casual and daily workers to benefits under the SGRL.

Penalties for non-compliance with SGRL regulations. The Committee notes with interest the strengthened sanctions established by Law No. 1562 in the event of default of the employer to observe its obligations in respect of occupational risks, including in case of non-payment of contributions or of absence of reporting of occupational accidents and illnesses.

Payment of benefits by employers to non-affiliated workers. In accordance with Law No. 1562, in the event of a work accident affecting a worker not affiliated to the SGRL by his or her employer, the latter will be directly responsible for the benefits provided by law. While the Government does not provide information on how this liability is applied in practice, the Committee understands from the comments made by the CGT and the CUT that the victims need to go to court. The Committee has always considered that the failure of employers to fulfil their obligation to affiliate workers, legal action by victims of accidents should not constitute the standard mean of appeal, the State being responsible for taking all necessary measures to ensure and facilitate the provision of employment injury benefits, leaving the possibility to hold the employer liable for reimbursing the expenses incurred by the State. With a view to being able to fully assess the practicalities of this issue, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether there exist interlocutory proceedings, either judicial or in the framework of labour inspection services, for victims of accidents or occupational diseases not affiliated by their employer to SGRL. Please also indicate the average length of the proceeding for obtaining payment of compensation in these circumstances.

Payment of benefits in the event of disputes about the commonality or occupational accident or disease. The CGT and CUT draw attention to the high number of cases where long delays would occur in health care or the payment of benefits due to disputes between health care providers and occupational risk insurers (ARL) on the origin of the accident or illness. The Government states that the Law No. 1562 guarantees the payment of cash benefits to workers even in cases where the source of injury or illness is in dispute. Under section 5(3) of the Law, when the cause of the accident or disease is questioned, the ARL pays the worker “the percentage provided by the contributory social security health system”. The Committee observes that this percentage is lower than that corresponding to occupational accident or illness. The Committee requests the Government to report on the practical effects of the adoption of the new law on the frequency and length of proceedings concerning disputes on the occupational or general nature of accidents or diseases.

Article 5 of Convention No. 17. Compensation in the form of lump sum. Law No. 1562 does not modify the rules applicable to workers who suffer a permanent loss of working capacity between 5 and 50 per cent: payment of compensation in the form of lump sum and maintenance of their employment relationship for the remaining working capacity. The Committee invites the Government to explain in further detail how employment protection is guaranteed by law. As for cases of permanent disability between 25 and 50 per cent where the risk of a loss of income is increased, the Commission considers it necessary, even if the employment relationship is preserved, to establish additional protection in the form of monitoring by the competent authority of the proper use of lump sum compensation, as provided in Article 5 of Convention. In this regard, the Committee again expresses the hope that the Government will introduce appropriate procedures to strengthen the protection of victims of occupational accidents and diseases against the misuse of lump sum compensations.

Article 11 of Convention No. 17. Protection against insolvency. The Government indicates in its report that the Guarantee Fund for Financial Institutions (FOGAFIN), would be responsible both for social assistance benefits and cash benefits in the event of insolvency of an ARL while the CUT stresses in its comments that, in accordance with section 83 of Decree Law No. 1295 of 1994, the Fund only guarantees the payment of pensions provided by the ARL. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the normative texts extending the FOGAFIN guaranty to social assistance benefits provided under the SGRL scheme.

The Committee notes that the practical information requested in respect of cases of insolvency of employers responsible for compensating workers who were not affiliated to the SGRL has not been supplied. The Committee understands that the cautionary measures contained in the Labour and Social Security Procedural Code are only aimed at preventing the risk of insolvency of the employer. Recalling that victims of industrial accidents should in any case not bear the consequences of the insolvency of the employer, the Committee requests the Government to explain in its next report how the State guarantees access to benefits to the worker who, while not affiliated to SGRL, fell victim of an industrial accident.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2015.]

Comoros

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations sent by the Union of Autonomous Trade Unions of Workers of Comoros (USATC) which referred to the inefficiency of the National Social Insurance Fund and the inexistence of a service for registering workers with it, which, in practice, results in many wage earners not being declared and therefore not being covered by the Fund. In this regard, the Government stated that this situation was due essentially to problems of communication between Anjouan, the headquarters of the Fund, and Moroni, the capital of Comoros. Consequently, the Committee asked the Government to take, in the near future, all the necessary measures to improve the functioning of the Fund.

In its latest report, the Government states that an awareness-raising policy has been implemented to persuade the management of public or private enterprises, undertakings or establishments to register with the National Social Insurance Fund, so that the benefits provided for by national legislation in the event of occupational accidents are paid to all workers employed in such entities. With regard to workers who are not registered with the Fund, the Government states that some abuses have been noted in respect of the application of the Convention and that, consequently, it intends to extend National Social Insurance Fund registration to all workers. The Committee notes this information with interest and asks the Government to continue providing information on the progress made in progressively extending the application of the national legislation to all workers, employees and apprentices employed in public or private enterprises, undertakings or establishments, in accordance with this provision of the Convention. In the meantime, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the manner in which it is ensured, in practice, that the Convention applies to workers who are not declared with the National Social Security Fund and to specify, in particular, how national legislation and practice guarantee these workers compensation and the payment of medical expenses by their employers. Moreover, the Government is requested to indicate in its next report the penalties incurred and those effectively imposed in the event of failure to comply with the obligation to ensure that workers are covered by occupational accident insurance. The Government is also asked to indicate whether there is any particular aspect that the labour inspection bodies are required to monitor when carrying out inspection visits and to provide copies of extracts of any relevant inspection reports in this respect. The Government is also asked to provide copies of the Act relating to the National Social Insurance Fund, the Decree relating to its statutes and the Order establishing the organization, working rules and system for the financing of the National Social Insurance Fund.

Part V of the report form. Statistical information on the application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to provide information, in particular statistics, on the application of the Convention in practice. In this regard, the Government indicates that the labour administration services do not have a statistics department capable of providing reliable statistical data and that no notable progress has been recorded in respect of the reorganization and strengthening of the national system of statistics and information on the labour market. The Committee notes that the Government requests the technical assistance of the Office and hopes that the Office will soon be in a position to provide this technical assistance.

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes that ever since Comoros ratified the Convention in 1978, it has had to draw the Government's attention to the need to amend the content of section 29 of Decree No. 57-245 of 24 February 1957 on the compensation and prevention of occupational accidents and diseases. Pursuant to this provision, foreign victims of occupational accidents who have moved abroad receive as compensation only a lump sum equal to three times the amount of the periodical payment granted to them, whereas nationals continue to receive their periodical payments. Foreign dependants no longer residing in Comoros only receive a lump sum not exceeding the value of the periodical payment established by order. Finally, the dependants of a foreign worker employed in Comoros are not entitled to any periodical payments if they did not reside in the country at the time of the worker's accident.

In its latest report, as in those sent since 1997, the Government states that in practice, no distinction is made between national and foreign workers in respect of their treatment in terms of occupational accident compensation. It states that foreign workers continue to receive their cash benefits abroad provided that they give their new address. The Government's report does not however indicate the progress made in respect of the draft text which, according to the information sent by the Government in its previous reports, should repeal the provisions of Decree No. 57-245 which are inconsistent with the Convention.

Consequently, the Committee trusts that the Government will take adequate measures, without delay, to bring the national legislation fully into line with the Convention, which provides that foreign nationals of States which have ratified the Convention, and their dependants, shall receive the same treatment as that guaranteed to nationals in respect of compensation for occupational accidents.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention (Revised), 1934 (No. 42) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. National schedule of occupational diseases. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to amend Order No. 59-73 of 25 April 1959 as the schedules annexed to it do not cover all the occupational diseases listed in Article 2 of the Convention. In this respect, the Government indicates in its last report that Order No. 59-73 referred to above has become obsolete and that the schedule of occupational diseases applicable in Comoros is that appended to Article 2 of the Convention. This schedule is communicated to enterprise doctors and to employers' and workers' organizations. While taking due note of this information, the Committee considers that it would be more appropriate, particularly with a view to achieving greater clarity and legal security, for the Government to formally repeal the above Order and replace it with a new legislative text recognizing the occupational origin of the diseases in the Schedule attached to Article 2 of the Convention. That would also provide an opportunity to adopt all the technical measures in this respect, thereby guaranteeing the proper operation of the system for the recognition of occupational diseases, for example, by establishing the conditions for the recognition of occupational diseases by physicians who are duly trained in this respect or by establishing minimum periods of exposure to the toxic substances and agents contained in the schedule.

Operation of the system for the recognition of occupational diseases. With reference to the comments made previously by the Union of Autonomous Trade Unions of Workers of Comoros (USATC) reporting the absence of a technical structure for the recognition of occupational diseases and of a national supervisory mechanism, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it is aware of the need to establish an occupational health service in this respect. Among the initiatives taken in this regard, the Government refers to a survey on occupational health undertaken by the General Directorate of Labour at the enterprise level. It also indicates that a study on the basis for a national occupational safety and health policy is currently being prepared. The Committee takes due note of this information and observes that the Government would like to benefit from the technical assistance of the Office with a view to the establishment of a national statistical service. The Committee hopes that the ILO will be in a position to provide the assistance requested in the very near future and that this will also be an occasion to assist the national authorities to improve the operation of the National Social Insurance Fund in general.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Costa Rica

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1972)

Part VI (Employment injury benefit). Articles 34, 36 and 38 of the Convention (read in conjunction with Article 69). The Committee regrets to note once again that, despite the primacy recognized by the Constitution of Costa Rica to ratified international Conventions and the incorporation of Convention No. 102 into the block of constitutionality, there has been no change with respect to the provisions of the Labour Code limiting the period during which pensions are paid in the event of permanent disability of less than 67 per cent or in case of death of the breadwinner as a result of a work accident. The Committee observes that these limitations are not in line with Articles 36 and 38 of the Convention which in principle provide for exceptions to the payment of periodical payments throughout the contingency in the case of partial disability where the degree of incapacity is slight. The Committee has continuously held that a permanent disability entailing a loss of earning capacity greater than 25 per cent cannot be considered slight. In these circumstances, the Committee once again requests the Government to, without delay, take the necessary steps to eliminate the contradictions between the Labour Code and Part VI of the Convention. Moreover, the Committee notes that the other elements of information in relation to Part VI of the Convention requested in the report form have not been received. The Government states in this respect that it was not able to ensure that the National Insurance Institute provide the relevant information. The Committee trusts that the Government will take all necessary measures to ensure that the requested information is supplied in its next report.

Part VII (Family benefit). Articles 40–44. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the non-contributory pension scheme. While the benefits provided by the scheme are fully relevant to compliance with Parts V (Old-age benefit), IX (Invalidity benefit) and X (Survivors' benefit) of the Convention, they do not seem to correspond to the contingency covered by Part VII, i.e. the responsibility for the maintenance of dependent children. The Committee recalls that, under Article 41 of the Convention, family benefit should be either: a periodic payment; the provision to or in respect of children, of food, clothing, housing, holidays or domestic help; or a combination of both types of benefits. In accordance with Article 41(c), these benefits may be granted on condition of resources. In this context, the Commission considers that the conditional cash transfer programme Avancemos, described by the Government in its report and directed to promote school integration of children from families with economic difficulties, meets the objectives of Part VII of the Convention. The Committee understands that other social assistance programmes mentioned by the Government such as Bienestar familiar, correspond to the goals of family benefit to the extent that some of its services are responsive to the needs of children. In order to comprehensively assess the implementation of Part VII of the Convention in Costa Rica, the Committee invites the Government to specify in its next report the amounts of these social assistance programmes directly targeted to the needs of children.

Article 72. Principle of democratic administration of the social security system. Under paragraph 1 of Article 72 of the Convention, when the administration of the social security scheme is not entrusted to an institution regulated by public authorities or by a government department responsible to Parliament, representatives of the persons protected shall participate in administration or be associated therewith in a consultative capacity. The Committee requests the Government to explain in its next report how it gives effect to this principle under the Supplementary Compulsory Pensions Scheme.

Issues raised by the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN). The Committee notes the comments of the CTRN received on 2 September 2012 and the Government's note of 5 November 2012 indicating that replies to the CTRN communication will be sent promptly. The CTRN comments refer specifically to the following issues: the deterioration that characterizes the health care provided by the Social Security Fund (CCSS), where an increasing number of insured need to litigate before the courts with a view to being granted certain treatments or medicines; the possibility of reducing the level of invalidity, old-age and survivors' pensions in the near future; the complexity of the administrative and judicial procedures to access disability pensions; the consequences of the opening to private companies of insurance against employment injuries on the quality of services provided by the National Insurance Institute and industrial accident prevention policies. The Committee requests the Government to reply to the comments submitted by the CTRN in its next report.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1987)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee recalls that the Democratic Republic of the Congo has accepted the obligations under Convention No. 102 in relation to old-age benefit (Part V), family benefit (Part VII), invalidity benefit (Part IX), and survivors' benefit (Part X). The Democratic Republic of the Congo has also ratified the Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118), and the Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 (No. 121).

In 2004, following the comments that it has been making for many years concerning the need to bring the national legislation fully into conformity with the standards referred to above, the Government established a Committee on Social Security Reform with the mandate of preparing a draft revision of the Social Security Code (Ministerial Order No. 12/CAB.MIN/TPS/DC/FMK/066/04 of 8 December 2004). In 2005, by Decree No. 05/176 of 24 November, the Government also created the National Social Protection Support Programme (PNPS).

The Committee notes that, according to the information provided by the Government in its latest report, it has not been possible to finalize the reform of the social security system as the body responsible for approving the draft of the new Social Security Code, the National Labour Council, is experiencing financial difficulties in holding its 30th Session. It also notes that the Government has availed itself of ILO technical assistance for the preparation of the draft text of the new Social Security Code, and that this assistance covered, among other matters, the reinforcement of the institutional capacities of the National Social Security Institute and the extension of social protection to populations hitherto not covered.

The Committee trusts that the Government will take all the necessary measures to finalize the reform of social security in the near future. It also hopes that the Government will provide detailed information in its next report due in 2012 on the manner in which the legislation gives effect to Convention No. 102, and on any difficulties encountered in practice in the application of the Convention. Please provide a copy of the new Social Security Code or the draft text approved by the National Labour Council, as appropriate.

Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes with regret that, notwithstanding the comments that it has been making for many years, the Government's latest report does not indicate any tangible progress achieved in bringing the national legislation into conformity with the Convention and does not provide the information requested previously on the following points:

- the need to add to the schedule of occupational diseases, diseases caused by the toxic halogen derivatives of the aliphatic series hydrocarbons and those caused by benzene or its toxic homologues (Article 8 of the Convention);
- the need to specify the manner of calculation and actual payment for the periodic benefits due in respect of temporary incapacity for work, including incapacity at its initial phase, and benefits in respect of the total or partial loss of earnings capacity, or the death of the breadwinner, in accordance with the report form for the Convention under Articles 13, 14 and 18 (in relation with Articles 19 and 20);
- the need to indicate how the periodic benefits due in respect of total or substantial loss of earnings capacity and survivors' benefits are reviewed following substantial changes in the general level of earnings where these result from substantial changes in the cost of living (Article 21);
- the need to explain the manner in which appeal procedures operate in practice in the case of refusal of the benefit or complaint as to its quality or quantity (Article 23);
- the need to describe the manner in which the State assumes general responsibility for the proper administration of the institutions or services concerned in the application of the Convention (Article 24, paragraph 2).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Djibouti

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Ever since the Convention was ratified in 1978, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to amend section 29 of Decree No. 57-245 of 1957 on the compensation of occupational accidents and diseases in order to bring the national regulations into conformity with Article 1(2) of the Convention. According to this provision, the nationals of States that have ratified the Convention and their dependants must receive the same treatment as Djibouti grants to its own nationals in respect of workers' compensation. Under the terms of this section of the Decree, unlike nationals, foreign workers injured in industrial accidents who transfer their residence abroad no longer receive a periodical payment but a lump-sum payment equal to three times the periodical payment they received previously. The Government previously referred to a draft reform of the labour legislation aimed at the full application of the principle of equal treatment and the formal repeal of the residence requirement laid down by the Decree of 1957. The Government also stated that this residence requirement has only been applied occasionally to foreigners. In its last report, the Government indicates that the Committee's observations will be studied by the National Council for Labour, Employment and Vocational Training with a view to bringing the national legislation into conformity with the Convention. It hopes that the conditions allowing for this process to resume will be met as soon as possible. Nevertheless, the Government points out that the Djiboutian system does not apply any reduction to the amount of the periodical payment transferred abroad. The Committee trusts that, in view of the situation which prevails in practice, the Government will seize the opportunity represented by the reform of the system of social protection currently under way and will formally repeal section 29 of Decree No. 57-245 so as to bring both the letter and spirit of the national legislation into full conformity with Article 1(2) of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Sickness Insurance (Industry) Convention, 1927 (No. 24) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the system of social protection in force in Djibouti is currently undergoing major restructuring involving the amalgamation of various existing insurance funds. The aim is to rationalize the management thereof, while extending the scope of sickness insurance with a view to the gradual affiliation of the whole population, including persons working in the informal sector. To this end, Act No. 212/AN/07/5e L establishing the National Social Security Fund (CNSS) provides that new complementary social instruments such as sickness insurance, funded supplementary pension plans and voluntary insurance will be instituted by means of regulations. The Committee also welcomes the recent formulation of the programme to promote decent work in Djibouti and the initiative to include a component on social protection. The Committee encourages the Government to take all possible steps to complete the reforms under way and to keep it informed of the progress made with a view to establishing an operational sickness insurance system in the context of the principles guaranteed by the Convention. The Government is also invited to continue its efforts towards integrated management of the social security system providing protection for the greatest possible number of people, if necessary, with technical support from the Office.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Invalidity Insurance (Industry, etc.) Convention, 1933 (No. 37) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the social protection system in Djibouti is undergoing major restructuring involving the merger of various insurance funds, each of which has its own invalidity branch in the interest of efficient management. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of progress in implementing the abovementioned reform and to indicate in its next report the manner in which national law and practice give effect to the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Ecuador

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1970)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

With reference to its previous observation, the Committee notes the indication contained in the Government's report of 2007 that the Constitutional Tribunal declared several provisions of the Social Security Act of 2001 unconstitutional. In order to clarify the situation in law, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide, in its next detailed report due in 2012, information on the extent to which the amended legislation gives effect to each of the provisions of the Convention, as well as the statistical information requested in the report form. Please supply also any regulations that have been adopted to apply the new Act.

Article 5 of the Convention (in conjunction with Article 10). Payment of benefits abroad. The Government confirms in its report that the payment abroad of old-age, invalidity and survivors' benefits, and of workers' compensation in cases of accidents, occupational diseases or the death of the worker, is made in each individual case on the basis of a resolution issued by the Benefits Committee of the Ecuadorean Social Security Institute (IESS). Referring to the conclusion of the Multilateral Ibero-American Social Security Convention and the Andean Instrument of Social Security (Decision No. 583) establishing the principle of equality of treatment and exportability of benefits among the ratifying parties, the Government also indicates that where bilateral social security agreements have been concluded, special liaison offices have been created with respect to the transfer of benefits abroad. The Committee once again requests the Government to legitimize the practice of authorizing the payment of benefits abroad by adopting a specific provision ensuring that Articles 5 and 10 are applied both in law and in practice, as it had previously expressed the intention of doing. The Committee asks the Government to send information on the progress made in this regard in its next detailed report due in 2012. The Committee recalls in this respect that the scope of obligations assumed by Ecuador under Convention No. 118 goes beyond the circle of the countries party to the Andean Instrument of Social Security or the Multilateral Ibero-American Social Security Convention. By ratifying Convention No. 118, the Government has undertaken to guarantee, in accordance with its Articles 5 and 10, payment of the above benefits to the nationals of any other Member which has accepted the obligations of the Convention in respect of a given branch, as well as to its own nationals and to refugees and stateless persons, in the event of residence abroad, irrespective of the new country of residence or the conclusion of any reciprocity agreement.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 8 of the Convention. Recognition of occupational diseases. The Committee notes that the legal provisions on occupational diseases are to be found in the Labour Code of 2005 (sections 349, 363, 364, etc.), Chapter VII of Social Insurance Act No. 2001-55, particularly in section 158, and in resolution No. 741 (general regulations on occupational risk insurance). The Committee observes in this connection that section 363 of the Labour Code contains a schedule of occupational diseases and that section 364 allows for a Risk Assessment Committee to add other occupational diseases to those already listed. Resolution No. 741, section 4, lists the specific agents carrying a risk of occupational disease, and section 6 lists the occupational diseases they are liable to cause, with the requirement that the "presence and action" of the agent concerned must be demonstrated. Section 9 of the resolution allows for the Disability Evaluation Committee to add other occupational diseases on condition that this Committee first establishes a causal link between the work performed and the acute or chronic ailment. It should be noted that the Labour Code says nothing of the need for proof of a causal link, either in connection with the list of occupational diseases or in relation to the decisions of the Risk Assessment Committee. Consequently, the Committee requests the Government to specify the coverage of the various provisions referred to above as regards the lists of occupational diseases, and to specify which of these lists it deems to be consistent with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee also asks the Government to provide copies of decisions by the Risk Assessment Committee and by the Incapacity Assessment Committee so that the burden of proof regime governing occupational diseases not included in the lists can be assessed. The Committee further requests the Government to take appropriate steps to amend section 5 of resolution No. 741, so as to establish a presumption of occupational origin in favour of workers suffering from a disease enumerated in Schedule I of the Convention when they are engaged in the types of work mentioned in the schedule.

Article 9. Coverage of chronic diseases. The Committee notes that in its report the Government construes sections 10, 12, 14 and 19 of resolution No. 741 and section 177 of the IESS Codified Statute to mean that benefits under employment injury insurance are not subject to length of employment, duration of insurance membership or payment of contributions. The Committee observes, however, that in section 14 of the above resolution, under which occupational diseases are treated on a par with employment accidents, reference is made to acute, but not to chronic, occupational diseases. Consequently, to avoid all ambiguity, the Committee asks the Government to confirm that its interpretation of the abovementioned provisions also applies to chronic diseases.

Articles 13, 14 and 18 (in conjunction with Articles 19 and 20). Amount of periodical payments. The Committee notes the information in the Government's 2007 report to the effect that the calculation of cash benefits is based on Article 19 of the Convention. If this is so, the Committee invites the Government to explain in its next detailed report, due in 2012, how it determines the skilled manual male employee in accordance with Article 19(6), specifying the amount of his earnings, benefits and family allowances as established in Parts I-V of the report form or under Article 19 of the Convention.

Article 21. Review of the rates of cash benefits. The Committee notes with interest that the Social Security Act was amended in 2009 by the Act to Amend the Social Security Act, the Armed Forces Social Security Act and the National Police Force Social Security Act, which entered into force on 30 March 2009 (supplement to Official Gazette No. 559). Thus, section 234 of the Social Security Act has been amended by section 11 of the amending Act which establishes that cash benefits shall be increased at the beginning of each year by a percentage equal to that of the previous year's inflation. The Committee invites the Government to provide the statistical information requested under Article 21 of the report form.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Invalidity, Old-Age and Survivors' Benefits Convention, 1967 (No. 128) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee regrets to note that the report supplied by the Government in 2007 reproduced the text of its report of 2001 and is therefore not at all responsive to the Committee's observation of 2005. It therefore expects the Government to supply a new detailed report containing reliable information on the application of all Articles of the Convention according to the report form adopted by the Governing Body, covering the developments in pension insurance for the whole period since 2001. Meanwhile, the Committee has examined the Law on Social Security of 2001, the statistics of the Ecuadorian Social Security Institute (IESS) annexed to the report and the Government's reply to the questions raised in the Committee's previous observation. It has also examined the recent ILO study Assessment of the social security system of Ecuador (June 2008) (Diagnóstico del sistema de seguridad social del Ecuador) (hereinafter the Assessment).

Part I (General provisions). Article 4(2) and (3) of the Convention, in conjunction with Articles 9(2)(a), 16(2)(a) and 22(2)(a). Scope of coverage. In reply to the Committee's previous observation, the Government has supplied the statistics of the IESS for the year 2003, which contain data on the population covered (1,184,484 persons) by the Statutory General Insurance (Seguro General Obligatorio – SGO). The Committee observes however that the statistics supplied by the Government still do not permit the Committee to ascertain whether the scope of coverage required by these provisions of the Convention (25 per cent of all employees in the country) is attained in Ecuador, as they do not specify the number of employees protected in the prescribed classes in relation to the total number of employees in Ecuador. The Committee hopes that these numbers will be specified by the Government in its next report.

Part II (Invalidity benefit). Articles 7–13 and Part VI (Common provisions). Article 32. Suspension of benefits. The Committee notes that the information concerning the application of these Articles of the Convention was missing in the reports supplied by the Government in 2001 and 2007 and asks the Government to furnish it as soon as possible.

Part V (Standards to be complied with by periodical payments). Article 29. Review of benefits. According to section 204 of the Law on Social Security, the IESS has the authority to determine the periodicity and the rate of pension adjustments depending on the evolution of the Technical Reserve of the Pension Fund. The Government's report of 2007 on the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) indicated, for example, that in 2006 pensions were increased twice by Resolutions CD 088 of 4 January and CD 107 of 24 April 2006. The Committee would like the Government to provide the statistical information for the time period starting from 2001 on the effective adjustments of pensions in comparison with the corresponding evolution of the cost-of-living index. It would also like the Government to state its position regarding the need to establish in law a mechanism for the regular periodic adjustment of pensions highlighted in the ILO Assessment, page 100.

Part VII (Miscellaneous provisions). Article 38. Coverage of agricultural employees. Upon ratifying the Convention, Ecuador has availed itself of the temporary exclusion from its provisions of the employees in the sector comprising agricultural occupations on condition that it shall gradually increase the number of agricultural employees protected and regularly report the progress achieved in the application of the Convention to such employees. Such exclusion is permitted by the Convention in case agricultural employees were not protected by the legislation of the country in question at the time of the ratification and may be maintained until the legislation applying the provisions of the Convention in respect of the persons protected is extended to cover also agricultural employees. The Committee recalls that, after the ratification of the Convention in 1978, agricultural workers were incorporated into the social security system under a special scheme for the protection of agricultural workers by virtue of Decree No. 21 of 1986. The statistics of the IESS supplied by the Government for the year 2003 are structured by the regime of affiliation to the SGO and include, besides such categories as employees in the banking, domestic and construction sector, the category of agricultural affiliates (agricolas), whose number amounted to 18,664 persons out of the total number of 1,184,484 persons covered by the SGO. With respect to those categories, the new Law on Social Security of 2001 establishes a special scheme only for workers in the construction sector and does not refer to any special scheme for agricultural workers. Moreover, according to sections 2a and 9a of the Law on Social Security of 2001, workers in a relation of dependency, irrespective of the nature of their occupation or place of work, are subject to the SGO, which includes an intergenerational solidarity pension scheme providing old-age, invalidity and survivors' benefits required by the Convention. The Committee understands therefore that agricultural employees are now fully covered by the Ecuadorian legislation applying the Convention in the same manner as employees in industrial undertakings and that the initial reason for excluding agricultural employees from the application of the Convention subsists no more. It would like the Government to furnish in its next report all the appropriate explanations and statistics requested in Article 38(2) of the Convention. If agricultural employees are indeed covered, the Committee invites the Government to consider renouncing its right to avail itself of the exclusion authorized by this Article as from a stated date.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Medical Care and Sickness Benefits Convention, 1969 (No. 130) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's detailed report due in 2012 has not been received. Considering that the previous report supplied by the Government in 2008 reproduced the text of its report of 1998 and was therefore entirely unresponsive to the Committee's observation of 2007 and did not contain any information concerning the application of Articles 21–32 of the Convention, the Committee trusts that the Government of Ecuador will take its reporting obligation under article 22 of the ILO Constitution seriously and endeavours to apply international Conventions in good faith. It therefore expects the Government to supply a new detailed report containing reliable information on the application of all Articles of the Convention according to the report form adopted by the Governing Body, covering the developments in medical care and sickness insurance for the whole period since 1993. Meanwhile, the Committee has examined the Law on Social Security of 2001, the statistics of the Ecuadorian Social Security Institute (IESS) annexed to the report and the Government's brief reply to the questions raised in the Committee's previous observation. It has also examined the recent ILO study – Assessment of the social security system of Ecuador (June 2008) (Diagnóstico del sistema de seguridad social del Ecuador) (hereinafter the Assessment).

Part I (General provisions). Article 2, in conjunction with Articles 11(a) and 20(a). Scope of coverage. The Committee observes that the statistics of the IESS for the year 2003 do not permit it to ascertain whether the scope of coverage required by these provisions of the Convention (at least 25 per cent of all employees in the country) is attained in Ecuador, as the statistics do not specify the number of employees protected in the prescribed classes in relation to the total number of employees in Ecuador. The Committee hopes that these numbers will be specified by the Government in its next report.

Article 3. Coverage of agricultural employees. Upon ratifying the Convention, Ecuador has availed itself of the temporary exclusion from its provisions of the employees in the sector comprising agricultural occupations on condition that it shall gradually increase the number of agricultural employees protected and regularly report the progress achieved in the application of the Convention to such employees. Such exclusion is permitted by the Convention in case agricultural employees were not protected by the legislation of the country at the time of the ratification and may be maintained until the legislation applying the provisions of the Convention is extended to cover also agricultural employees. The Committee recalls that, after the ratification of the Convention in 1978, agricultural workers were incorporated into the social security system under a special scheme for the protection of agricultural workers by virtue of Decree No. 21 of 1986. The statistics of the IESS are structured by the regime of affiliation to the Compulsory General Social Security (Seguro General Obligatorio – SGO) and include, besides such categories as employees in the banking, domestic and construction sector, the category of agricultural affiliates (agricolas), whose number in 2003 amounted to 18,664 persons out of the total number of 1,184,484 persons covered by the SGO. With respect to those categories, the Law on Social Security of 2001 establishes a special scheme only for workers in the construction sector and does not refer to any special scheme for agricultural workers. Moreover, according to sections 2a and 9a of this Law, workers in a relation of dependency, irrespective of the nature of their occupation or place of work, are subject to the SGO, which includes the General Health Insurance Scheme providing medical care and sickness benefits required by the Convention. The Committee understands therefore that agricultural employees are now fully covered by the Ecuadorian legislation applying the Convention in the same manner as employees in industrial undertakings and that the initial reason for excluding agricultural employees from the application of the Convention subsists no more. It would like the Government to furnish in its next report all the appropriate explanations and statistics requested in Article 3(2) and (3) of the Convention. If agricultural employees are indeed covered, the Committee invites the Government to consider renouncing its right to avail itself of the exclusion authorized by this Article as from a stated date.

Part II (Medical care). Articles 11(a) and 12, in conjunction with Article 14 (Coverage of the wives and children of insured persons). In reply to the Committee's previous observation concerning the need to extend coverage by health insurance of the family members of the insured person, the Government states that medical care is given to children of the insured person during the first year of their life. The Government's report repeats however under Articles 5 and 12 of the Convention the statement made in 1998 that medical care for the family members of the insured person was not developed in Ecuador. The description of the health insurance provided by the IESS and attached to the Government's report (Annex 2) begins by stating that coverage is extended to affiliated persons and children of affiliated women (los afiliados y los hijos de las afiliadas), which means that children of male affiliates are not covered. In contrast, section 102 of the Law on Social Security extends comprehensive medical care to the affiliated person, his or her spouse or partner, and children under 6 years of age. However, the 2008 ILO Assessment (pages 52–53) determined that in practice this provision has not been implemented, medical coverage has not been extended to the wives of insured persons, and their children remain covered by medical care only for the first year of their life.

Notwithstanding the contradictory character of some of the above information, which the Government is invited to clarify, the Committee understands that, with regard to medical coverage of the wives and children of insured persons in Ecuador, there exists a huge gap between what is prescribed in law and what is achieved in practice. Besides undermining the effectiveness of law, such situations point to the lack of a resolute and consistent public policy in the area of health care of the population. The Committee notes that there has been no apparent progress in the extension of coverage over the last ten years. Failure to provide basic medical care to children of small age results subsequently in an adult population becoming less healthy and requiring more medical care during their productive life, thus increasing the social and economic costs for the society as a whole. The Committee considers that recalling the country's legal obligation under the Convention to raise the level of medical care to the internationally agreed minimum could be, together with the related international technical assistance, an important factor inducing the Government to elaborate effective policies and measures for improving the state of health of the nation and its labour resources. Fulfilling its obligations under the Convention would require of the Government, inter alia, to put in place a clearly defined national programme for the development of medical coverage of the wives and children of the insured persons. Such programme should be time-bound and result-oriented, setting out benchmarks to monitor progress particularly with respect to children of defined age, which should be progressively raised. For additional guidance in the elaboration of such a programme the Government may wish to turn to the Medical Care Recommendation, 1944 (No. 69), as well as to the advice from the technical departments of the Office.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Egypt

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes the adoption in 2010 by the Parliament of new legislation on pensions that will replace the public pay-as-you-go (PAYG) pension system by a system of individual accounts as of 2012 and establish a minimum pension funded from the state budget for all residents aged 65 or older, including individuals who have not contributed to the pension system. The Committee hopes that, in the context of this reform, the Government will take the necessary measures with a view to giving effect to the following provisions of Convention No. 118 to which it has been drawing the Government's attention since the Convention was ratified.

Article 3 of the Convention. Equality of treatment The Committee regrets to note that the Government's report does not contain any reply to the previous comments which read as follows:

According to section 2(2) of the Social Insurance Act (No. 79 of 1979), the provisions of this Act apply to foreign nationals on condition that the duration of their contract is not less than one year, and that there is a reciprocity agreement between their country of origin and Egypt, subject to non violating the provisions of conventions ratified by Egypt. The Government states nevertheless that the nationals of countries which have ratified Convention No. 118, enjoy insurance benefits provided under the Social Insurance Act regardless of the duration of their contracts or the existence of the reciprocity agreement. The same statement is made by the Government in its report of 2007 on Convention No. 19. The Committee takes due note of these statements and understands that the Convention has a higher rank in the national legal system than the law. The Committee notes that the Government has not supplied any documentary evidence requested by the Committee proving that the above interpretation given by the Government is applied in practice by the social security institutions. The Committee also recalls that in its previous reports on the application of Conventions Nos 19 and 118 the Government has been consistently making the opposite statement that foreign nationals could enjoy social insurance benefits subject to the duration of their contract being not less than one year. In this situation and in order to dissipate any doubts as to the fact that the requirements of the Convention overrule the abovementioned limitations contained in the Social Insurance Act, the Committee asks the Government to instruct the responsible social security institutions in the country to disregard the duration of contract and reciprocity agreement requirements under section 2(2) of the Social Insurance Act with respect to the nationals of 37 countries which have also ratified Convention No. 118, and for the accident compensation benefits, with respect to the nationals of 120 countries which have also ratified Convention No. 19.

Article 5. Payment of benefits abroad. Referring to the issues raised in the Committee's previous comments, the Government indicates that beneficiaries residing abroad are classified by country of residence. Insurance and pension benefits are regularly transferred each month without any financial burden on beneficiaries in cases where bilateral agreements have been concluded with the country of residence of the beneficiary. This has so far been the case with Cyprus, Greece, the Netherlands, Sudan and Tunisia and the Government is willing to conclude more such agreements. In the absence of bilateral agreement, beneficiaries need to justify pension entitlements with the Egyptian embassies or consulates at their place of residence in order to have their pensions paid to their bank account inside Egypt. They may afterwards transfer their pensions to their country of residence through the international banking system.

While it takes due note of this information, the Committee once again stresses that with respect to its own nationals and nationals of any other member that has accepted the Convention's obligations for the branches in question, Article 5 obliges the ratifying States to export benefits abroad even in the absence of any bilateral social security agreements with the country of nationality or the country of residence of the beneficiary concerned and to take unilateral measures to this effect. By placing the obligation to transfer benefits abroad on the State, Article 5 of the Convention specifically seeks to prevent situations where beneficiaries would have to make their own individual arrangements for the transfer of their entitlements abroad at their own expense. By ratifying the Convention, the Government has undertaken to ensure that the responsible social insurance institutions shall deliver the abovementioned benefits to the new place of residence of the beneficiary outside Egypt and shall bear the cost of such transfer. For this purpose, appropriate banking arrangements shall be put in place with the help of the National Bank, if need be, and use shall be made of the administrative assistance of the countries concerned, which they have to afford to Egypt free of charge under Article 11 of the Convention. The Committee observes that, in the absence of any bilateral agreement, the lack of practical methods for pensions transfer outside of Egypt often leads beneficiaries in practice to apply for lump sums (in accordance with sections 27 and 28 of the Social Insurance Act), which is contrary to the letter and the very purpose of the Convention, even when this is done at the request of the beneficiary. The Committee therefore once again strongly urges the Government to institute an effective system of the transfer of the Egyptian social security benefits abroad by taking appropriate measures either unilaterally or within the framework of bilateral and multilateral social security agreements with the countries with the highest number of pension beneficiaries. The Government may wish to seek technical assistance from the Office concerning the existing international legal frameworks for the maintenance of the acquired rights and rights in course of acquisition mentioned in Articles 7 and 8 of the Convention.

Article 10. Coverage of refugees and stateless persons. Referring to the Committee's previous comments, the Government states that refugees from Palestine and South Sudan are treated on an equal basis with Egyptian nationals with respect to social security. The Committee understands that all refugees and stateless persons other than the ones mentioned above also benefit from the provisions of the Convention without any condition of reciprocity and asks the Government to confirm such understanding in its next report.

France

Article 4(1) of the Convention. Equality of treatment without any condition of residence, including when establishing entitlement. The Committee refers to its previous comments and notes that French law and practice continue to impose a condition of residence for sickness benefit, maternity benefit, invalidity benefit and family benefit, subject to the provisions of certain bilateral agreements. The Committee further notes that the condition of residence is not applied with respect to employment injury pensions for the nationals of the other countries party to the Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19), (120 States). In the absence of a bilateral agreement, the condition of residence does not apply in practice in cases where the medical and administrative checks required for the provision of benefits can be carried out in the State of residence. As regards the lifting of the condition of residence for nationals of countries party to Convention No. 118, the Government indicates that most States which have a social security system impose the condition of residence on their territory for the grant and provision of benefits in cash, especially pensions and annuities. This leads France to place its undertakings in this field in the context of the second phrase of Article 4(1), which provides for the possibility of imposing a condition of residence in cases where the legislation of the country of residence also subjects the grant of benefits to the same condition. The Government adds that French law provides, where necessary, for a partial or total lifting of the reciprocal conditions of residence by means of a bilateral agreement with each State concerned.

The Committee recalls that, under Article 4(1), countries which have ratified the Convention are bound by a system of general reciprocity and undertake to ensure equality of treatment without any condition of residence for the nationals of any other State for which the Convention is also in force. However, the application of this guiding principle of the Convention may be suspended with regard to the benefits of a given branch of social security with regard to the nationals of any Member whose legislation imposes a condition of residence on its territory to the grant of the same benefits. In view of the intention expressed by the Government in its report to systematically apply the reservation provided for in the second phrase of Article 4(1), the Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report which countries, among those that have ratified the Convention, apply a condition of residence to the grant of benefits to French nationals with respect to the branches of social security that are also accepted by France, namely:

- medical care: Plurinational State of Bolivia, Brazil, Cape Verde, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Finland, Germany, Guinea, India, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Libya, Mexico, Philippines, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, Uruguay and Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela;
- sickness benefit: Barbados, Plurinational State of Bolivia, Brazil, Cape Verde, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Finland, Germany, Guinea, India, Iraq, Ireland, Italy, Libya, Madagascar, Mexico, Philippines, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, Uruguay and Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela;
- maternity benefit: Bangladesh, Barbados, Plurinational State of Bolivia, Brazil, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Ecuador, Egypt, Germany, Guatemala, Guinea, India, Iraq, Israel, Italy, Jordan, Libya, Madagascar, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, Uruguay and Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela;
- invalidity benefit: Brazil, Cape Verde, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ecuador, Egypt, Iraq, Italy, Jordan, Kenya, Libya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mexico, Philippines, Rwanda, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey and Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela;
- survivors' benefit: Barbados, Brazil, Cape Verde, Ecuador, Egypt, Guinea, Iraq, Israel, Italy, Jordan, Kenya, Libya, Mauritania, Mexico, Norway, Philippines, Rwanda, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Turkey and Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela;
- family benefit: Plurinational State of Bolivia, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Guinea, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Libya, Mauritania, Norway, Tunisia and Uruguay;
- as regards employment injury benefit, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which it gives effect to the Convention with respect to the nationals of the following five States which have accepted the provisions of Convention No. 118 for this branch but are not party to Convention No. 19: Ecuador, Guinea, Jordan, Libya and Turkey.

Greece

Article 2 of the Convention. Conformity of the national list of occupational diseases with the schedule established by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that an inter-ministerial committee has been established to examine the incorporation of the European schedule of occupational diseases into national law. On completion of its mandate on 1 February 2008, the aforementioned committee drew up a new national list of occupational diseases which is in conformity with Annex I to Commission Recommendation 2003/670/EC of 19 September 2003 concerning the European schedule of occupational diseases. Referring to the comments which the Committee has been making for many years, the Government states that the draft of the new list of occupational diseases is not restrictive, does not define the activities which can result in occupational disease, and contains a new heading relating to skin cancers. The draft of the new list must be the subject of a presidential decree signed jointly by the competent ministers before coming into force. The Committee notes this information with interest and requests the Government to send a copy of the new list of occupational diseases with its next report.

Part V of the report form. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes that, according to the statistical information provided by the Government, although the number of new cases of occupational disease registered each year varied between 20 and 26 cases per year during the 2001–05 period, this figure has dropped sharply since 2005. Seven cases of new occupational diseases were recognized in 2006, six in 2007, five in 2008 and four in 2009, the Government indicating that the number of registered occupational diseases refers only to diseases which give rise to the payment of an invalidity pension. The Committee requests the Government to explain the reasons for this significant drop in the number of new cases of recognized occupational disease and provide further information on the functioning in practice of the procedure for recognizing a disease as occupational, on the operation of the labour inspectorate, the existence of preventive measures, the number of cases where recognition was refused, etc.

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1955)

The Committee notes the Government report for the period ending 31 May 2011 received in February 2012 and its reply to the Committee's previous comments received in September 2012, as well as the 30th annual report on the application by Greece of the European Code of Social Security for the period from 1 July 2011 to 30 June 2012.

Actuarial evaluation of the 2010 pension reform

In its 29th report on the European Code of Social Security, the Government explained the profound reform of the pension system, carried out by Act No. 3863/2010 on the "New social security system and relevant provisions", by the need to safeguard its long-term viability and referred to an actuarial evaluation to be carried out in 2011 to assess the sustainability of reforms. In the 30th report on the Code, the Government indicates that such an evaluation was successfully carried out by the National Actuarial Authority in 2011 and supplied a copy of it (Ageing Projections Exercise 2012. Greek Pension System Fiche. European Commission, Economic Policy Committee, Ageing Working Group). The 2012 Projection Exercise evaluated changes to the main and auxiliary pension provisions in Greece brought about by the reform of 2010; new social security legislation implemented after September 2011 has not been incorporated. The main pension provision includes ten mandatory social insurance schemes, which cover salaried employees and self-employed persons grouped in certain occupations; the auxiliary pension provision includes supplementary social insurance schemes, each of which corresponds to a main social security scheme and runs in parallel with it. Together with the social solidarity grant provision (EKAS) to residents with no or low income, the main and auxiliary pension provisions account for almost 99 per cent of the total public pension expenditure in Greece. The 2012 projections were based on the present version of the ILO Pension Model developed to support actuarial reviews of statutory social security pension schemes and provide the quantitative basis for policy decisions. The projections concerning the main pension provision were peer reviewed by ILO experts.

The Committee has examined the main findings and conclusions of the 2012 projections and wishes to compliment the National Actuarial Authority for having accomplished such a complex undertaking of aggregating disparate data from multiple pension schemes into a common scenario. The reform of 2010 introduced a consolidated architecture of the pension system and new universally binding rules on entitlements, contributions, accumulation and indexation of pension rights. This permitted the previously highly fragmented Greek pension system to be financially monitored and allowed for meaningful actuarial projections which showed that, over the next 50 years, the application of stricter eligibility criteria and the reduction of the benefit replacement rate due to the decrease of the accrual rates substantially restrain benefit expenditure. Thus, the total public pension expenditure, including the EKAS, for 2060 reaches 14.6 per cent of GDP, which represents an increase of only 1.1 per cent of GDP over the period of 50 years and not the 10 per cent initially feared by the Government. This result however was achieved at the price of significantly curtailing pension rights by increasing pension age from 60 to 65, extending the full contributory period from 35 to 40 years, lowering the accrual rates and calculating pensions on the basis of the whole career earnings, instead of the five best years in the last ten before retirement. The Committee wishes to underline in this respect that, however tough the new pension rules happened to be, they stayed within the minimum standards of protection prescribed by the Convention and applied equally to all insured persons so that all current and future workers shared the burden on a pro rata basis. In particular, the combined replacement rate of the main and auxiliary pensions was maintained well above the 40 per cent level required by the Convention for the whole projected period. The 2012 projections confirmed therefore that the reforms introduced by Act No. 3863/2010 were sufficient to ensure the long-term viability of the pension system while maintaining it in line, conceptually and technically, with the minimum standards guaranteed by the Convention. According to the Government, the assessment of the 2012 projections by the Ageing Working Group of the European Commission in terms of the sustainability of pension reform in November–December 2011 was highly positive, notwithstanding the fact that the contribution of subsequent pension reduction measures adopted since September 2011 has not yet been included in this actuarial evaluation. The Committee wishes to emphasize this conclusion, which permits to distinguish the 2010 reform measures strengthening the long-term viability of the social security system from the subsequent austerity measures, which put into question the ability of the system to withstand the continuing contraction of the economy, employment and public finances.

Subsequent policies of social austerity

With regard to the pension reduction measures subsequent to the 2010 reform, which were taken in November 2011 and three times in 2012, in February, May and November, the Government states in its reply to the comments on the Convention that they were adopted within the application framework of the new Memorandum of Understanding between the Government of Greece and the IMF, the European Commission and the European Central Bank (referred to as troika). The Committee notes that these measures formed part of the austerity package and reform strategy imposed on Greece by its international creditors as a condition to unlock successive tranches of bailout funds necessary to prevent the bankruptcy of the country threatening to provoke a chain reaction throughout the European financial system. Being a member of the Eurozone, Greece did not have the option of devaluation to adjust its relative prices and wages and, to service its debts, it was therefore compelled to devalue the standards of living of its people. New cuts in pensions were introduced since 1 November 2011 by Act No. 4024/2011, including 40 per cent reduction of the part of the monthly main pension exceeding €1,000 for pensioners who have not attained the age of 55; 20 per cent reduction of the pension part exceeding €1,200 for pensioners aged 55; and 15–30 per cent reductions of various auxiliary pensions. From May 2012, main pensions, which after previous reductions still exceeded €1,300, were additionally reduced by 12 per cent with retroactive effect for the period January–April 2012 (section 6(1) of Act No. 4051/2012). A new package of austerity measures under the Memorandum of Understanding on the Medium-Term Fiscal Strategy 2013–16 (Memorandum III) was approved by the Greek Parliament in November 2012. With respect to pensions, the legal retirement age was set to rise from 64 to 67 on 1 January 2013, including for social benefits of the EKAS; all pension payments of over €1,000 were cut by between 5 and 15 per cent; Christmas, Easter and summer bonuses for pensioners were abolished, among other measures.

Impact of austerity measures on poverty levels

In August 2012, in the information supplied on Convention No. 102, the Government stated that, despite the specific measures to reduce pensions, the minimum levels set by Convention No. 102 were not affected. Minimum pensions granted by the Social Insurance Institute (IKA–ETAM) as well as other benefits granted to vulnerable social groups, such as the EKAS, the benefit for para/quadruplegia and the total disability benefit, have not been affected. Medium-income pensioners with pensions up to €1,000 per month have either not been affected by the cuts in main pensions or their income has undergone only a slight reduction not exceeding 5 per cent. The number of pensioners who have not been affected by any reduction amounted to around 1 million persons. The Committee observes however that, after the new round of pension cuts in November 2012, this information has become outdated and would have to be reviewed by the Government in its next report. In particular, the Government should be requested to indicate the exact minimum amounts of the benefits still guaranteed by the national legislation under all accepted Parts of the Convention.

The Committee further observes that pension cuts across the board have put a large percentage of the Greek population into instant poverty with no indication of how and when this population would recover. According to Eurostat data, in one year, from 2010 to 2011, the percentage of population suffering material deprivation (lack of at least three out of nine deprivation items) increased by 4.3 per cent and an additional 2.2 per cent of older persons over 60 fell below the risk of poverty threshold; the overall share of persons with an income below the risk of poverty threshold reached the highest point in the last decade. In total, in 2010, 27.7 per cent of Greek citizens or more than 3 million persons were at risk of poverty or social exclusion. The Committee notes that the information supplied by the Government included no such data and did not respond to the Committee's previous demand to assess the spread of poverty in the country and to consider social security policies in coordination with its tax, wage and employment policies under the Memorandum of Understanding. The Committee recalls that, in September 2011, the Government informed the High-level ILO Mission that "questions such as the impact of the pension reform on poverty levels as well as the sustainability of the social security system ... have not been addressed in the discussions with the troika". In view of the serious deterioration of the situation in Greece in 2012, the Committee considers it an urgent duty of the Government to assess past and future social austerity measures in relation to one of the main objectives of the Convention, which is the prevention of poverty. In particular, the Committee would like the Government to be asked to put this question on the agenda of its future meetings with the parties to the international support mechanism for Greece.

Need to link social benefits to subsistence level

While stressing the need to closely monitor the dynamics of poverty in the country, the Committee wishes to underscore that in the present situation the existing poverty indicators linked to the median income would no more reflect the real state of deprivation of the population. In fact, in the economy where wages are in freefall, so is the median income; the related poverty threshold may then fall below the level of physical subsistence of an individual. Where benefits are calculated as percentage of substandard wages, social security system resembles an iceberg where only a small part of benefits is paid above the subsistence level, while the bulk of the system operates below this level, where the application of most provisions of the Convention becomes meaningless. The Committee considers that the State would cease to fulfil its social responsibility if its social security benefits did not ensure the subsistence of the persons protected. With these considerations in mind, the Committee is concerned that, according to the report of the high-level ILO mission, there is no concept of a subsistence wage in Greece, and that the minimum pension is set well below the poverty threshold. In February 2012, the minimum wage was reduced by 22 per cent and by 32 per cent for workers below the age of 25 and has slumped to the level of the second half of the 1970s. The Committee considers that in a country where large segments of the population live below the poverty threshold, wages and benefits should be linked to indicators of the physical subsistence of the population determined in terms of the basic needs and the minimum consumer basket. The Committee would like the Government to explain in its next report whether any subsistence level is established for different age groups of the population and, if so, how it is determined and how it is related to the minimum wage and minimum amounts of social security benefits.

Concern for justice and equity in handling the crisis

The above considerations which successively raise concerns about the impact of austerity policies on the viability of the Greek social security system, its observance of the minimum standards prescribed by the Convention, and its capacity to reduce poverty and ensure subsistence, still do not respond to no less important concern for the principles of social solidarity, justice and equity in handling the crisis. The Committee has also invited the Government to explain to what extent it abides by these principles in the context of the implementation of the international support mechanism for Greece. The Committee notes that while the Government has not replied to this question, the Greek National Commission for Human Rights and the Greek Court of Auditors have expressed strong criticism of its austerity policies. On 8 December 2011 the Greek National Commission for Human Rights – an advisory body to the Government in matters of human rights protection – issued the Recommendation with the self-explanatory title “The imperative need to reverse the sharp decline in civil liberties and social rights”, where it condemned the “ongoing drastic reductions in even the lower salaries and pensions” and “the drastic reduction or withdrawal of vital social benefits”. As this Recommendation has not been followed by the Government, the Court of Auditors, which vets Greek laws before they are submitted to parliament, one year later, in November 2012, ruled that recurrent cuts in pensions were contrary to articles 2, 4, 22 and 25 of the Constitution as they conflict with the constitutional obligation to respect and protect human dignity, the principles of equality, proportionality and the protection of labour. While decisions of the Court of Auditors are not obligatory for the Government and the State, such a ruling opens the legal way to anyone who wants to file a complaint and oppose pension cuts in court. Notwithstanding the fact that the Government did not follow the ruling of the Court of Auditors, the Committee requests it to fully reflect the position of the judiciary power of the Greek State in its next report, indicating in particular the number of cases opposing pension cuts in courts and the nature of the decisions taken by the latter.

With respect to the principles of justice and equality in relation to social austerity measures, one should recall that Article 71(1) of the Convention demands that cuts in benefits, likewise their costs, shall be borne collectively taking into account the economic situation of the classes of persons protected: the fortunate classes should bear a proportionately larger share of the burden, while persons of small means should be preserved from hardship. The Committee understands that the situation in Greece is rather the opposite: the troika stresses the need to improve Greece’s competitiveness by reducing non-wage labour costs and allowing wages to adjust downward without regard to collective agreements or the basic subsistence needs, while the Government transforms these recommendations into direct cuts in wages and pensions, which places a disproportionately large share of the country’s efforts on the ordinary people. In contrast, in its previous observation, the Committee considered it incumbent upon the Government to assess, together with the troika, the resources available to those who evade contributing to the country’s efforts, in order to ensure that they are forced to contribute by all possible legal means. Taking into account the widespread feeling of social injustice in the imposition of austerity measures, the Committee requests the Government to indicate what measures were taken to increase contribution to the country’s efforts by the most fortunate contributors – individuals, banks, companies, industries, civil and religious organizations, and other bodies able to contribute to the social welfare system through taxes or earmarked contributions.

Responsibility of the State for the reverse engineering of austerity

The Committee observes that by continuing social security reforms by means of social austerity policy the Greek State has shifted the balance between its social responsibility towards its people and the fiscal responsibility towards its creditors in favour of the latter. The Committee notes with regret that the evolution of the situation in Greece confirms its previous conclusion that applying exclusively financial solutions to the economic and social crisis could eventually lead to the collapse of the internal demand and the social functioning of the State, condemning the country to years of economic recession and social unrest. It is with great concern that the Committee notes in this respect that the Greek economy is predicted to shrink 6.5 per cent in 2012 and a further 4.5 per cent in 2013. To prevent such outcomes, the principle of the general responsibility of the State for the proper governance of its social security system, which extends throughout all the provisions of the Convention, reminds all the constituent powers of the State of their collective obligation to ensure that the policy of fiscal and financial consolidation does not undermine the fulfilment of the social and human objectives of the Convention at least at the level permitting to maintain the protected population “in health and decency” (Article 67(c) of the Convention). With this idea in mind, the Committee requests the Government to ask the National Actuarial Authority to analyse the redistributive effects of benefit cuts and to assess the overall impact of the austerity policies on the sustainability of the social security system. It should also explore and provide information on the most rapid scenarios of undoing certain austerity measures and returning disproportionately cut benefits to the socially acceptable level, which at least prevents the “programmed” impoverishment of the beneficiaries. The Committee is confident that such reverse engineering of austerity may restore some hope in the future of the Greek social security system and provide valid grounds for resuming national social dialogue for this purpose. The Committee hopes that the Greek Ministry of Labour and Social Security will make full use of the ILO technical assistance to support the quantitative analysis of these options by the National Actuarial Authority, which could then review the 2012 projections accordingly.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

Guinea

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 5 of the Convention. Payment of benefits in case of residence abroad. The Committee recalls that the Government, in its earlier reports, indicated that the new Social Security Code, when adopted, would give full effect to Article 5 of the Convention under which the provision of old-age benefits, survivors benefits and death grants, and employment injury pensions must be guaranteed in the case of residence abroad, irrespective of the country of residence and even in the absence of agreements with such country, both to nationals of Guinea and to nationals of any other State which has accepted the obligations of the Convention for the corresponding branch. However, in its last report, the Government indicates that the new Social Security Code does not entirely fulfil the requirements of the provisions of Article 5 of the Convention, in that it does not provide for maintenance of payment of the various benefits in case of change of residence, and that this restriction is a constant feature of the legislation governing the field in the States in the subregion. However, the Government hopes that further negotiation of bilateral agreements with other States will make good this weakness in the Social Security Code.

In this connection, the Committee notes that under section 91, paragraphs 1 and 2, of the new Code, benefits are cancelled when the beneficiary definitively leaves the territory of the Republic of Guinea, or are suspended while she or he is not resident on national territory. It notes however that, under the last paragraph of that section, these provisions “are not applicable in the case of nationals of countries which have subscribed to the obligations of the international Conventions of the International Labour Office regarding social security ratified by the Republic of Guinea, or where there are reciprocal agreements or multilateral or bilateral social security agreements on the provision of benefits abroad”. Since, by virtue of this exception, the nationals of any State which has accepted the obligations of Convention No. 118 for the corresponding branch, may in principle now claim benefits in case of residence abroad, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether this is in fact the case and, if so, whether a procedure for the transfer of benefits abroad has been established by the national social security fund, to meet the possible demands for such foreign transfer. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to state whether the exception provided in the last paragraph of section 91 is also applicable to Guinean nationals in the event of their transferring their residence abroad, in accordance with the principle of equal treatment established under Article 5 of the Convention as regards the payment of benefits abroad.

Article 6. Payment of family benefit. With reference to the comments it has been formulating for many years regarding the provision of family allowances in respect of children residing abroad, the Committee notes that, under section 94, paragraph 2, of the new Code, to obtain the right to family allowances, dependent children “must reside in the Republic of Guinea, subject to the special provisions of the international Conventions on social security of the International Labour Office, reciprocal agreements or bilateral or multilateral agreements”. With respect to reciprocal agreements or bilateral or multilateral agreements, the Committee recalls that to date Guinea has concluded no agreement of this sort for the payment of family allowances in respect of children residing abroad. Regarding the special provisions of the ILO Conventions, it recalls that under Article 6 of Convention No. 118 any State which has accepted the obligations of the Convention for branch (i) (family benefit) must guarantee payment of family allowances both to its own nationals and to the nationals of any other member which has accepted the obligations of this Convention for that branch, as well as for refugees and stateless persons, in respect of children who reside on the territory of any such State, under conditions and within limits to be agreed upon by the States concerned. In this connection, the Government states in its report that the payment of family benefits is guaranteed to families of whom the breadwinner has been regularly insured by the social security system, and is in order regarding the payment of his own contributions, and those of his successive employers. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will be able to confirm formally in its next report that the payment of family allowances will also be extended to cover insured persons up to date with their contributions, whether they are nationals, refugees, stateless persons or nationals of any other States which have accepted the obligations of the Convention for branch (i), whose children reside on the territory of one of these States and not in Guinea. The Committee would also like to know in these cases how the condition of residence is dispensed with for the application of section 99, paragraph 2, of the new Code, which only recognizes as dependent those children “that live with the insured person”, and also for section 101, which makes payment of family allowances subject to an annual medical examination of the child, up to the age where she or he comes under the school medical service, and the regular medical care for beneficiaries of school age attending courses in educational or vocational training establishments.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government’s report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 8 of the Convention. Occupational diseases. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the list of occupational diseases revised in 1992, indicating whether it is now in force.

Article 15(1). Conversion of periodical payments into a lump sum. In accordance with the provisions of section 111 of the Social Security Code, periodical payments for employment injury are converted into a lump sum when the permanent incapacity is at most equal to 10 per cent. The Committee recalls, however, that its comments concerned the possibility of converting the benefit granted in the event of employment injury in the circumstances provided for in sections 114 (conversion after expiry of a five-year period) and 115 of the Social Security Code (conversion into a lump sum of part of the periodical payment at the request of the person concerned). The Committee again expresses the hope that the necessary measures will be taken to ensure that in all these cases periodical payments may be converted into a lump sum only in exceptional cases and with the consent of the victim where the competent authority has reason to believe that the lump sum will be utilized in a manner which is particularly advantageous for the injured person.

Articles 19 and 20. Amount of benefits. In the absence of the statistical information requested which the Committee needs so that it can determine whether the amount of benefits paid in the event of temporary incapacity, permanent incapacity and death of the breadwinner, reaches the level prescribed by the Convention, the Committee once again asks the Government to indicate whether it avails itself of Article 19 or of Article 20 of the Convention in establishing that the percentages required by Schedule II of this instrument have been reached, and to provide the statistical information required by the report form adopted by the Governing Body under Article 19 or 20, depending on the Government’s choice.

Article 21. Review of employment injury benefit rates. In view of the importance it attaches to this provision of the Convention which establishes that the rates of employment injury benefits must be reviewed to take account of trends in the cost of living and the general level of earnings, the Committee hopes that the Government’s next report will contain information on the amount of the increases already established and that it will not fail to provide all the statistics required by the report form under this Article of the Convention.

Article 22(2). Payment of employment injury benefits to dependants. The Committee once again expresses the hope that the Government will be able to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in all cases where employment injury benefits are suspended and particularly in the cases provided for in sections 121 and 129 of the Social Security Code, part of these benefits will be paid to the dependants of the person concerned in accordance with the provisions of this Article of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the provisions of the Conditions of Service of the Public Service give public servants and their families full satisfaction as regards social coverage. It once again asks the Government to provide the text of the provisions of the above Conditions of Service dealing with compensation for employment injury with its next report.

Lastly, the Committee asks the Government in its future reports to provide information on any progress made in the revision of the Social Security Code, to which the Government referred previously.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guinea-Bissau

Workmen's Compensation (Agriculture) Convention, 1921 (No. 12)

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17)
(ratification: 1977)

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention, 1925 (No. 18) (ratification: 1977)

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19)
(ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Reporting obligations. The Committee notes the Government's reports on Conventions Nos 12, 17, 18 and 19, received for the first time since the year 2000, notwithstanding the numerous reminders sent to the Government. It regrets, however, that they still do not reply to most of the questions raised in the comments of 2001 and repeated in 2008, 2009 and 2010. The National Workers' Union of Guinea (UNTG) in its observations on the Government's reports on ratified Conventions, stressed that the Government should step up its efforts to comply with international labour standards and bring its legislation in line with the ILO Conventions. In the UNTG's opinion, the Government should take all necessary measures to strengthen its technical, material and financial capabilities to enforce the application of the labour standards in the private and public sectors. The Committee hopes that the Government will take these observations into account and will not fail to include the information requested in its next detailed reports on these Conventions due before 1 September 2012. The Government is also reminded to provide detailed information on the practical application of these Conventions as required in Part V of the report forms, particularly on the number and nature of the occupational accidents reported and the amount of benefits paid.

Legal framework of protection against occupational accidents and diseases in Guinea-Bissau. The said legal framework is composed of several laws and decrees, including Decree No. 4/80 on Compulsory Insurance on Occupational Accidents and Diseases (6 February 1980), Regulatory Decree No. 6/80 regulating Decree No. 4/80, Legislative Decree No. 5/86 on Establishment of a Social Protection Regime (29 March 1986), Legislative Decree No. 1/97 on the Replacement of the National Insurance and Social Protection Institute by the National Institute of Social Security (INPS) and GUIBIS-Guinea-Bissau Insurances SARL (29 April 1997), and Act No. 4/2007 on the Legal Framework for Social Protection (3 September 2007). Decree No. 4/80 governs compulsory insurance against occupational accidents and diseases providing for the workers' (and their family members') right to compensation. It sets the definition of occupational accidents and diseases and rules regarding the exercise of the rights to compensation under the compulsory insurance scheme, and financed through employers' and workers' contributions, operated by the INPS. Regulatory Decree No. 6/80 establishes different types of benefits to which a worker suffering an occupational accident or disease is entitled according to the degree of incapacity, and sets forth the rules to determine the base salary upon which compensation is paid. Legislative Decree No. 5/86 repeals the provisions of the Agricultural Code and establishes the basis of the general regime of social security. Legislative Decree No. 1/97 replaces the former National Insurance and Social Protection Institute with the INPS. Lastly, Act No. 4/2007 establishing a Legal Framework for Social Protection for the population of the country, consists of three schemes: Citizenship Social Protection of a non-contributory nature; Mandatory Social Protection, which is a contributory regime covering all wage earners (nationals or foreigners); and a voluntary Complementary Social Security scheme. The Committee would ask the Government to complete the above description of the legal framework existing in the country and providing protection against occupational accidents and diseases, clarifying in particular: (i) whether Act No. 4/2007 has entered into force and been regulated; (ii) whether Decree No. 4/80 and Regulatory Decree No. 6/80 have been repealed by Act No. 4/2007; (iii) the relations between Regulatory Decree No. 5/86 and Act No. 4/2007, with respect to their scope of application, rules regarding foreign workers, benefits and degrees of compensation for incapacity of workers due to occupational accidents and diseases; (iv) proposals for reforming this framework and elaborating new legislation.

Adoption of the list of occupational diseases. The Committee recalls that back in 2000, the Government stated that the INPS, which has competence for workers' compensation for occupational accidents and diseases, was having difficulty in identifying occupational diseases, and consequently, the Ministry of Public Health had not been able to adopt a list of such diseases. In its 2011 report on Convention No. 18, the Government regretted that Guinea-Bissau has neither enacted a legal regime regulating occupational diseases nor adopted a list of such diseases but reported that a Commission had been established to review the legislation regarding industrial accidents and to draft legislation and establish a list of occupational diseases. While taking due note of these developments, the Committee wishes to remind the Government that by ratifying Convention No. 18 it has made the list of diseases in Schedule to Article 2 of the Convention part of the national legal order. That list was elaborated by the International Labour Conference back in 1925 specifically for the purpose of providing countries, which had no capacity to establish their own lists, with a ready-made compendium of diseases recognized as occupational on the basis of the best international experience available at that time. Since then, the ILO list of occupational diseases has been complemented on several occasions (see Conventions Nos 42 and 121 and Recommendation No. 194) by new diseases the professional origin of which was ascertained by the evolution of scientific knowledge. The diseases listed in Convention No. 18 ratified by Guinea-Bissau therefore constitute the minimum protection to be guaranteed and must be automatically recognized as occupational where contracted in the conditions prescribed in the Schedule by all the national authorities for the purposes of workmen's compensation. The Committee would like the Government to explain what legal or other reasons prevented it for so long from bringing this list to the attention of the national labour administration, social insurance and judicial authorities in order to ensure the practical implementation of the obligations assumed by the country under Convention No. 18. The Committee again expresses the hope that the Government will take all necessary steps to ensure, through the adoption of the new legislation referred to in its report, that the list of occupational diseases established by the Convention becomes fully operational and legally enforceable in the country for the purpose of workmen's compensation.

Compensation for occupational accidents and diseases. The Committee notes from the report on Convention No. 17 that, in practice, compensation may be paid wholly as a lump sum. Please indicate what authority is competent to decide that payment shall be made in a lump sum and what guarantees, if any, for the proper utilization of the lump sum it ordinarily requires, in accordance with Article 5 of Convention No. 17. The report also states that public servants are not subject to any legal framework in relation to compensation in case of industrial accidents, but, if a public servant suffers a personal injury due to an industrial accident, he/she receives compensation in the form of a sum of money. The Committee would ask the Government whether any consideration was given to the possibility to include public servants within the legal framework protection against occupational accidents and diseases. Finally the Committee notes that, according to section 17(2) of Decree No. 6/80, where the incapacity is such that the injured person must have the help of another person or special care, the pension may be increased to up to 100 per cent of the basic wage. Please indicate the number of people who are actually receiving such an increased pension.

Application to agricultural wage earners. In its previous reports on Convention No. 12, the Government had indicated that Decrees Nos 4/80 and 6/80 governing compulsory insurance against occupational accidents and diseases applied to agricultural wage earners. In its 2011 report, the Government indicates that, according to section 1(b) of Chapter I of Legislative Decree No. 5/86 only agricultural wage earners whose employers can be identified are mandatorily covered, while independent agricultural wage earners who do not perform their work in a "family regime", as set out in section 2(2)(d) of Decree No. 4/80 are excluded from coverage. Section 17 of Act No. 4/2007 provides, however, that wage earners in all branches and sectors are to be included in the Mandatory Social Protection System, provided that the employer they work for can be identified, with the exclusion only of domestic workers who are subject to a special regime. The Committee would like the Government to explain what agricultural wage earners are covered by the "family regime" and whether they benefit from the protection given by the legislation cited above. Please explain also the special regime applicable to the domestic workers.

Section 6 et seq. of Decree No. 4/80 set forth a general definition of occupational accidents as well as the definitions related to specific sectors such as agriculture, where according to the Government, occupational accidents are defined as the wrong use of chemical products and protection equipment. The Committee wishes to point out that the principle of equality of treatment of agricultural wage earners implies that they should benefit from the same definition of occupational accidents that is applicable to other workers. The Government should therefore consider harmonizing the different definitions of occupational accidents so that workers in different sectors of activities would benefit from the same protection and compensation.

The Government states that it has no statistics on occupational accidents and diseases because most of agricultural wage earners are not aware of their obligation under section 20 of Decree No. 4/80 to report the occurrence of any occupational accident or disease to the National Institute of Social Security. The General Labour Inspectorate has neither special knowledge in the field of agricultural work nor financial nor human resources to carry out inspections in this sector. Most occupational accidents and diseases are caused by the fact that agricultural workers do not wear suitable protection equipment in carrying out their tasks. Some companies fail to comply with their obligations under occupational accidents and diseases legislation and some others are not even registered with the INPS. The Committee notes the practical difficulties encountered by the Government in the application of Convention No. 12. It observes that these difficulties will not go away without systemic and vigorous action taken by the Government in cooperation with the social partners to raise awareness of workers and companies of their respective rights and obligations, establish simple and rapid procedures for reporting occupational accidents supported by insurance compensation and labour inspection, promote the use of protection equipment and safer technologies, etc. The Committee asks the Government to step up its efforts to reduce the gap between the agricultural and the industrial sectors with regard to protection against occupational accidents and diseases and to indicate the concrete measures taken in this respect in its next report.

Equality of treatment of foreign workers. In its previous comments concerning Convention No. 19, the Committee pointed out that section 3(1) of Decree No. 4/80 is inconsistent with the Convention in that it lays down reciprocity as a requirement for equality of treatment between foreign workers employed in Guinea-Bissau and national workers. In response, the Government mentions that article 28 of the Constitution forbids any discrimination between foreigners and citizens and that under the current legal order, equality of treatment regarding accident compensation is granted to all workers. In practice, the Government indicates that the General Labour and Social Security Inspectorate did not find any situation amounting to unequal treatment of injured workers, and that no judicial decisions have been rendered evidencing unequal treatment between foreign and national workers.

The Committee also notes that section 17(2) of Act No. 4/2007 provides that workers who suffered injuries as a result of an industrial accident are covered by the mandatory social protection scheme without any condition as to residence in the country, and section 3 requires the Government to foster the conclusion or adherence to international agreements aiming at the reciprocal recognition of equality of treatment of the nationals of the countries concerned. The Committee recalls, in this respect, that Convention No. 19 lays down a system of automatic reciprocity between the 121 ILO member States which have ratified it, and thereby ensures that nationals of all countries party to the Convention, as well as their dependants, benefit from national treatment in respect of workmen's compensation. It would therefore be more consistent with the Convention and the Act No. 4/2007 for section 3(1) of Decree No. 4/80 to be amended so as to delete the reciprocity requirement. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether, pursuant to Article 1(2) of the Convention, any compensation is paid for injured persons or their dependants residing outside the country, and if so, to provide the statistical data confirming these payments.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guyana

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention (Revised), 1934 (No. 42) (ratification: 1966)

In reply to the issues raised in the Committee's previous observation, the Government indicates that there has been no change in the national legislation on occupational diseases and the necessary measures to ensure compliance with the Convention have yet to be taken. In previous reports, the Government had indicated that the competent authorities have been requested to accelerate the review procedure. The Committee therefore trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend the list of occupational diseases currently established by Regulation No. 34 of 1969, implementing Act No. 15 of 1969 on national insurance and social security (Cap. 36:01), with respect to the following points:

- No. 1(x), (xi), (xii) and (xiv) on the list are to be replaced by a heading containing in general terms all halogen derivatives of hydrocarbons of the aliphatic series;
- No. 7, which refers to certain disorders due to radiation, should include all pathological manifestations due to radium and other radioactive substances or X-rays and the list of processes likely to induce these should be completed;
- No. 1(i) and (v), relating to poisoning by lead and its compounds and mercury and its compounds, should include lead alloys and mercury amalgams respectively;
- No. 1(iii), which refers to poisoning by phosphorus and its compounds, should include the inorganic compounds of phosphorus;
- No. 2 should include, among the processes likely to induce anthrax infection, all loading and unloading or transport of merchandise of any kind;
- silicosis with or without pulmonary tuberculosis and the industries or processes involving the risk of this infection should also be added to the list.

The Committee wishes to remind the Government that the abovementioned issues have been regularly brought to its attention since 1972.

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention (Revised), 1934 (No. 42) (ratification: 1955)

General situation. According to the Government's report, the Act of 28 August 1967 establishing the Employment Injury, Sickness and Maternity Insurance Office (OFATMA) covers all dependent workers, regardless of the sector of activity. With regard to the agricultural sector, the report specifies that, while agricultural workers are not excluded by the Act, they cannot benefit because of the predominance of family farming and the absence of agricultural enterprises. The Committee also notes that over 95 per cent of the active population in Haiti is engaged in the informal economy. The Committee also notes that under the 1967 Act, the OFATMA currently manages employment injury insurance, but that it has still not been possible to set up a sickness insurance scheme.

In this context, the initiatives indicated by the Government mainly address the training of labour inspectors and the construction of two hospitals in the north and south of the country. The Committee also notes the Government's statements that it plans to continue its efforts, on one hand to progressively establish a sickness insurance branch covering the population as a whole and, on the other to enable the OFATMA to regain the trust of the population. The Committee takes due note of these points. In order to better assess the challenges facing the country in the application of the social security Conventions and support the initiatives taken in this regard more effectively, the Committee requests the Government to provide further information in its next report on the reasons for the population's loss of trust in the OFATMA, and to provide key figures on the operation of the employment injury insurance scheme administered by the OFATMA (numbers covered, amount of contributions collected annually, number of employment accidents and occupational diseases recorded, amount of benefits paid for employment injury).

International assistance. The Committee notes that the Government's actions receive substantial support from the ILO and the international community, particularly in terms of labour inspection. In addition, since 2010, the ILO and the whole of the United Nations system have made available to the Government their expertise for the establishment of a social protection floor. The Committee also notes that Better Work, a joint ILO and International Finance Cooperation programme, operating in the textile sector in Haiti with a view to improving both working conditions and productivity, has noted that the failure to pay social security employment injury and old-age pension contributions was a widespread phenomenon in the textile industry and it prioritized this issue. Through targeted actions and, in particular, the organization of information meetings of the National Old-age Insurance Office (ONA) in the enterprises concerned, Better Work, in its biannual report of October 2012, noted a significant improvement in the payment of social security contributions to the ONA and the OFATMA. The Committee invites the Ministry of Labour and the OFATMA to take these targeted actions regarding contributions into consideration with a view, where appropriate, to their replication in other sectors of the formal economy in Haiti.

Regarding the establishment of a social protection floor, the Committee considers that it is necessary for the Government to envisage as a priority establishing mechanisms to provide the population as a whole, including informal workers and their families, with access to essential health care and a minimum income when their earnings capacity is affected. In this respect, the Committee emphasizes that, in order to provide guidance to States where the social security systems are facing difficulties in light of the national economic and social situation and to guarantee respect for the right of everyone to social security, the International Labour Conference adopted the Social Protection Floors Recommendation, 2012 (No. 202), with a view to the establishment of all the basic social security guarantees to prevent and alleviate poverty, vulnerability and social exclusion. In this connection, the implementation of Conventions Nos 12, 17, 24, 25 and 42 and of Recommendation No. 202 should continue in parallel, seeking and exploiting synergies and complementarity.

The Committee recalls in this regard that the establishment of a social protection floor has been included by the Haitian Government as one of the elements of the Action Plan for National Recovery and Development of Haiti, adopted in March 2010. However, since then this objective appears not to have led to the development of a national policy on the subject. Recalling that the Office's technical assistance, coordinated with that of the United Nations system as a whole, has been made available to the Government, the Committee invites it to provide information in its next report on the initiatives taken with a view to establishing a social protection floor.

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19) (ratification: 1955)

Article 4 of the Convention. Mutual assistance among States which have ratified the Convention. The Committee notes that many Haitian workers present in the Dominican Republic have no social security coverage, including with regard to industrial accidents. The Committee notes that a representation under article 24 of the ILO Constitution concerning the application of Convention No. 19 by the Dominican Republic was submitted by a Dominican trade union organization. This representation was declared receivable by the ILO Governing Body at its 310th Session (March 2011) and is currently being examined by a tripartite committee. Recalling that, under Article 4 of the Convention, States which ratify the Convention undertake to afford each other mutual assistance with a view to facilitating its application, the Committee invites the Government of Haiti, jointly with the Government of the Dominican Republic, to include labour migration and migrant workers' access to social security as priority themes of dialogue between the two countries. Noting the existence of the cooperation project on gender-aware labour migration policies in the Nicaragua–Costa Rica–Panama and Haiti–Dominican Republic corridors (Políticas de migración laboral sensibles al Género en los corredores Nicaragua–Costa Rica–Panamá y Haití–República Dominicana), the Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of technical assistance from the Office.

Honduras

The Committee notes the Government's report and the observations received in August 2011 from the Single Confederation of Workers of Honduras (CUTH). The CUTH refers to the conditions faced by Miskito workers who engage in fishing activities in the form of diving for crayfish and prawn. These observations, together with the Government's reply received on 9 October 2012, are examined in relation to the application of the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169).

The Committee has been referring for many years to problems in the operation of the system for the notification of industrial accidents and, in particular, occupational diseases. The Committee notes the very low number (66) of occupational diseases which were the subject of compensation between 2007 and 2012. It also notes that the Government, in its last report, does not provide any information on the reasons for the lack of applications for compensation for temporary or permanent incapacity with respect to the hundreds of cases of acute poisoning from organophosphorus pesticides recognized as being of occupational origin to which the Government referred in its previous report.

In the light of the above, the Committee notes with concern that the Government makes no further mention in its last report of its intention to reform the legislation by introducing the obligation to notify occupational diseases. The Committee therefore strongly encourages the Government to adopt legislative measures and practices in order to improve the operation of the system for the prevention, registration and compensation of occupational diseases.

India

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention (Revised), 1934 (No. 42) (ratification: 1964)

Improvement of coverage and application in practice. The Committee notes that the two Acts through which the Convention is applied were recently revised: the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923, was amended by the Employees' Compensation Act, 2009, and the Employees' State Insurance (ESI) Act was amended by the ESI (Amendment) Act, 2010. The Committee notes with interest that these revisions broaden the coverage of both Acts and that the Employees' Compensation Act now provides for the full reimbursement of actual medical expenditure incurred for treatment of occupational injuries, enhances the minimum rates of compensation and sets a mechanism for their re-evaluation from time to time. The Committee notes that the ESI scheme would now cover 15.4 million employees. It observes that, according to section 2(9)(ii) of the ESI Act, contract workers are also covered by the scheme. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information and statistics regarding the number of contract workers actually receiving ESI benefits. With regard to the application of legislation in practice, the Committee observes that the number of detected and compensated occupational diseases remains as low as 50 for the 2011–12 period, three types only of occupational diseases having been registered. While noting the initiatives mentioned in the Government's report, such as the establishment of the Institute of Occupational Health and Environment Research or the training of dispensary doctors on occupational diseases, the Committee can only conclude that the current mechanisms for screening and compensating occupational diseases are not effective. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take more significant action in consultation with the social partners in order to raise their awareness of the risks of occupational diseases and the need to make prevention, screening and compensation of occupational diseases part of the enterprise culture.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

Japan

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19) (ratification: 1928)

With reference to its observation of 2007, the Committee notes with satisfaction that, according to the Government's report, received in October 2012, the Immigration Control and Refugee Recognition Act No. 319 of 1951 was revised in July 2009 to strengthen protection of foreign trainees/technical interns, who thus become covered by the Labour Standards Act and the Industrial Accident Compensation Insurance Act from the first year of their training programme in Japan. The Committee notes the comments of the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO) attached to the Government's report, maintaining that foreign workers engaged in illegal employment should also have their rights to industrial accident compensation respected on an equal footing with Japanese nationals. The Committee invites the Government to reply to the JTUC-RENGO comments. The Committee also notes extensive measures reported by the Government under the Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121), to ensure effective implementation of the revised Immigration Control Act and to increase coverage of foreign technical interns under the Industrial Accident Compensation Insurance Act.

Kenya

The Committee notes that the Government is in the process of amending the Work Injury Benefits Act, 2007 (WIBA, 2007) so as to align it with the National Constitution of 2010 and the National Occupational Safety and Health Policy, as well as with the Convention, where necessary. The Committee also notes the annual report of the Directorate of Occupational Safety and Health Services provided by the Government in appendix to its report. According to this report, there are about 140,000 workplaces in the formal sector, while the total workforce in Kenya is estimated at 10.3 million in both formal and informal sectors. However, only a total of 6,023 accidents were reported during the year (249 of which were fatal). The report explains in this respect that whereas reporting of occupational accidents is a requirement under the WIBA, 2007 reporting remained poor and in most cases not done within the stipulated time. In addition, non-availability of transport for field stations, inadequate financing and staffing to deal with increasing workload, together with the need to provide continuous technical training for occupational safety and health officers were identified as major challenges.

Taking note of the above, the Committee wishes to acknowledge the importance for the application of the Convention in practice of strengthening the human and material resources made available to the competent authorities in charge of monitoring the implementation of the national legislation in the area of employment injuries. The Committee considers in this respect that the work injury benefits scheme in Kenya which settles 768 compensation cases per year for a workforce of over 10 million does not appear to fulfil the objective of the Convention of providing compensation to all workers who suffer personal injury due to an industrial accident. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged in this respect in the light of the main conclusions of the report of the Directorate of Occupational Safety and Health Services.

Republic of Korea

Article 1 of the Convention. Equality of treatment of migrant workers. In its 2011 direct request, the Committee asked the Government to reply to the observations made by the Federation of Korean Trade Unions (FKTU) raising concern over the treatment of foreign workers in national law and practice and to indicate the sanctions imposed in case of breach of the national legislation concerning occupational accidents. In its reply received in September and November 2012, the Government states that foreign workers who are victims of employment injuries are entitled to the same compensation as national workers. Foreign workers, just like Korean workers, are allowed to choose between a lump sum and a pension in case of disability due to an industrial accident. Nonetheless, in accordance with sections 57 and 58 of the Industrial Accident Compensation Insurance Act (IACIA), if a foreign worker entitled to a pension leaves the Republic of Korea, his or her pension entitlement is terminated and converted into a lump sum compensation. This is done in order to avoid unjust receipt of insurance benefits as it is difficult to keep track of changes in the personal details of beneficiaries and determine whether they are still entitled to receive benefits. Since pensions and lump sum payments have the same legal value, paying one instead of the other benefit cannot be considered as being discriminatory.

In the new communication received 31 August 2012, the FKTU reiterates its concern that migrant workers, contrary to national workers, are forced under the IACIA to receive lump sum compensation upon returning to their respective countries. In practice, most migrant workers falling victims to industrial accidents have to leave Republic of Korea as it would be difficult for them to retain their right to stay in the country and impossible for those who are undocumented to live in the Republic of Korea based on disability pension alone.

The Committee observes that sections 57 and 58 of the IACIA do not guarantee equality of treatment between Korean workers and nationals of other Member States that have ratified the Convention; this equality should be granted without any condition as to residence. The Committee wishes to stress that the right to equal treatment cannot be conditioned by the administrative capacity of the Government to undertake the necessary checks with a view to preclude possible cases of abuse. On the contrary, to overcome such difficulties, Article 4 of the Convention requires ratifying countries to afford each other mutual assistance with a view to facilitating the application of the execution of their respective laws and regulations on workmen's compensation. The Committee hopes that these explanations will help the Government to reconsider the treatment of migrant workers both under section 57 and 58 of IACIA with respect to their right to receive employment injury abroad. The Committee invites the Government to provide additional information on developments in this regard.

Part V of the report form. Supervision and enforcement of the application of the Convention in practice. The Government states in its report that in cases where employers would fail to report occupational accidents, foreign workers may still claim compensation on their own or through medical institutions. Employers refusing to respond in an investigation, or to supply information, requested by the Korean Workers' Compensation and Welfare Service (COMWEL), are subject to a fine of up to 1 million Korea (South) won (KRW) (sections 117 and 129 of the IACIA). A fine of up to KRW10 million is imposed on employers who fail to report industrial accidents to the Minister of Employment and Labour, and violation of law by the company may be made public where the employer wilfully failed to report twice over a 3-year period (section 10 of the Occupational Safety and Health Act). The Government further refers to a Court ruling (Seoul Administrative Court, 11 April 2007; 2006 Guhap 26899) which considered it illegal to refuse giving a vocational training subsidy for rehabilitation after an industrial accident, only on the grounds that the person was a foreign national.

From its side, the FKTU reiterates that the IACIA does not contain any provision allowing for direct legal remedy against employers violating their duty to sign and seal application letters for workers' compensation. The legal sanctions referred to by the Government only represent administrative penalties and it is doubtful whether the current system efficiently prevents the employers from dissimulating industrial accidents. Although the nearly 500,000 foreign workers are considered to represent only 3.9 per cent of all the salaried employees, they are involved in about 6.9 per cent of the total number of industrial accidents. This is significantly higher than the average occurrence rate for national workers and this figure does not take into account the unreported industrial accidents.

Taking note of this information, the Committee requests the Government to review the regime of sanctions in order to ensure that employers accurately report industrial accidents and do not discriminate against foreign workers. To that end, the Committee would like the Government's next report to supply extensive information on the manner in which the national legislation is applied in practice by reference, inter alia, to the number of inspections undertaken and the amount of sanctions imposed.

Lebanon

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1977)

According to the information provided by the Government, the draft text to amend Legislative Decree No. 136 of 1983 establishing the legal framework for the compensation of employment injury is still awaiting validation by the Cabinet, before being submitted to Parliament for adoption. According to the Government, this draft text would give effect to Article 2 of the Convention by making the Legislative Decree applicable to apprentices. Furthermore, the draft of the new Labour Code includes the provisions of Article 5 (payment of benefits in the form of periodical payments and guarantee of the proper utilization of lump sum payments) and the guarantees envisaged in Article 11 in the event of the insolvency of the insurer. The requirements of Article 8 of the Convention, where recourse is had to this provision, prevail over domestic law (review of the periodical payments in the event of a change in the state of the victim), although broader studies on the matter are necessary. No further information is provided with regard to Article 6 (payment of compensation throughout the temporary contingency, and beyond the nine months envisaged in the Legislative Decree) and Article 7 (additional compensation for injured persons requiring the constant help of another person). According to the information provided by the National Social Security Fund, annexed to the Government's report, in the event of an employment accident, compensation is provided as from the 11th day following the absence from work, contrary to Article 6 of the Convention, which provides that compensation shall be paid no later than from the fifth day after the accident. The Committee regrets that, despite the comments that it has been making for many years, the measures necessary to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention are still at the draft stage. The Committee trusts once again that the Government will make every effort to complete the current reforms with a view to guaranteeing all the protection afforded by the Convention to injured workers.

Malaysia

Peninsular Malaysia

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19) (ratification: 1957)

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, June 2011)

Article 1(1) of the Convention. Equal treatment of foreign workers. The Committee recalls that since 1 April 1993, the Malaysian social security system has contained inequalities of treatment that run counter to the provisions of the Convention. This inequality is due to national legislation that transferred foreign workers, employed in Malaysia for up to five years from the Employees' Social Security Scheme (ESS), which provided for periodical payments to victims of industrial accidents, to the Workmen's Compensation Scheme (WCS), which guaranteed only a lump sum payment of a significantly lower amount. On several occasions, the case of Malaysia has been discussed by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards. Most recently, in June 2011, the Conference Committee urged the Government to take immediate steps in order to bring national law and practice into conformity with Article 1 of the Convention, to respect the system of automatic reciprocity instituted by the Convention between the ratifying countries, and to avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO to resolve administrative difficulties by concluding special arrangements with the labour-supplying countries under Articles 1(2) and 4 of the Convention. In August 2011, the Government indicated that a technical Committee within the Ministry of Human Resources including all stakeholders will pursue the formulation of the right mechanism and system to administer this issue considering the following three options: (i) extension of ESS coverage to foreign workers; (ii) creation of a special scheme for foreign workers under the ESS; and (iii) raising the level of the benefit provided by the WCS so as to be equivalent to that of the ESS benefit.

Replying to the Committee's 2011 Observation, the Government indicates in its latest report that it is currently in the midst of conducting the actuarial study on the three options under consideration and that upon completion of the study, continuous engagement with the stakeholders will be carried out before the most suitable option is determined. The Committee hopes that the study under preparation will be finalized shortly, that the choices made by the Government in consultation with all stakeholders will fully take into account the requirements of the Convention, that a new approach consistent with the Convention will be implemented expeditiously and that it will report thereon.

Mauritania

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1968)

Governance of the social security system. In a communication dated 22 August 2011, the General Confederation of Workers of Mauritania (CGTM) reports recurrent dysfunctions related to the operation of the social security system relating to the governance of the schemes that make up that system. The CGTM indicates that the Government has assumed the right to appoint the majority of the members of the deliberative body of the National Social Security Fund (CNSS), which enables it to determine the policy to be followed, without even leaving the workers' representatives a blocking minority. Frequently, in order to cover its needs, the State appropriates the assets of the pensions system and makes appointments to the posts of directors-general of the CNSS and of the National Sickness Insurance Fund (CNAM) as political favours to the detriment of the technical competence required to manage these institutions. The CGTM adds that the coverage of active workers is still very patchy due to the social fraud practised by most employers to avoid paying contributions through their practice of hiring labour through subsidiaries and only declaring a minority of their employees. The supervisory services of social insurance institutions are very limited and not operational in most cases. In view of all of the inadequacies indicated in its comments, the CGTM calls on the Government to undertake without delay a total reform of the CNSS, gathering together for that purpose the social partners as rapidly as possible, with a view to adapting it to the new realities of the development of the economic and social fabric and the new challenges that it has to face, with particular reference to ensuring its participatory management, protecting social security funds against bad management and the sustainable financing of social security.

In view of the gravity of the allegations, the Committee requests the Government to reply in detail, in the light of Articles 71 and 72 of the Convention. Please also provide: copies of the latest annual reports on the management and activities of the CNSS; relevant extracts from the reports of the inspection and supervisory services relating to the issues referred to above; and a copy of the latest actuarial study of the social security system in Mauritania. The Government is also requested to indicate any measures adopted to promote exchanges of information between the fiscal authorities and social security institutions with a view to improving the management of the social security system and establishing a policy to combat social fraud, undeclared work and fraud in the payment of social security contributions. Finally, with regard to the calls made by the CGTM to open up a national debate on the future of social security, the Committee requests the Government to indicate in its next report the effect given to the calls made by the social partners for consultations.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1968)

Article 5 of the Convention. Payment of benefits in the event of residence abroad. The Committee recalls that, under the terms of section 66(2) of the Act of 3 February 1967, the payment of social security benefits is suspended where the beneficiary is not resident in Mauritania, except where reciprocity agreements or international agreements exist. Where the beneficiary originates from a State that has signed such an agreement with Mauritania, the physical presence of the beneficiary is not required for opening the entitlement to benefits or for setting up a bank transfer of the benefits. In practice, in the event of residence in any country which does not have an international agreement with Mauritania, benefits may still be paid but on condition that the beneficiary, whether a Mauritanian national or a foreigner, is physically present on Mauritanian territory at least once a year for the payment of benefits in order to establish the beneficiary's physical identity and ensure that any undue payments are avoided.

The Committee previously noted that, in view of the small number of bilateral social security agreements concluded by Mauritania, the requirement of physical presence in the country in order to receive benefits in cases where the beneficiary resides in a country which does not have an agreement with Mauritania is incompatible with Article 5(1) of the Convention, which guarantees the payment abroad of invalidity benefits, old-age benefits, survivors' benefits and employment injury pensions. Consequently, in order to make this provision of the Convention operational in practice and guarantee beneficiaries' rights in an effective manner, the Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary steps to: (i) enable the identification and monitoring of beneficiaries through Mauritanian consulates abroad; and (ii) take steps to conclude bilateral agreements to facilitate the export of benefits to countries where the largest numbers of actual or potential beneficiaries are resident.

Mauritius

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19) (ratification: 1969)

Article 1 the Convention. Equality of treatment. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to amend section 3 of the National Pensions (Non-Citizens and Absent Persons) Order, 1978, as amended by the National Pensions Act (NPA), under which foreign nationals may not be affiliated to the insurance scheme unless they have resided in Mauritius for a continuous period of not less than two years. Foreign workers who do not meet this residence condition are covered by the Workmen Compensation Act, 1931, which does not ensure the level of protection equivalent to that guaranteed under the national pension scheme in the event of employment injury. In its previous reports, the Government repeatedly indicated that a bill revising section 3 of the Order of 1978 was being prepared and would be introduced to the National Assembly as soon as it had been accepted by the State Law Office. In its last two reports, including the report received in September 2012, the Government makes no reference to the above bill. Instead, the Government's latest report indicates that the Ministry of Social Security, National Solidarity and Reform Institutions will have a working session with the officers of the State Law Office in September 2012 with a view to finalizing the bill for the merger of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1931 and the National Pensions Act, 1976. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the legislation resulting from the merger will fully comply with the principle of equal treatment between national and foreign residents guaranteed by the Convention without any condition as to residence.

Myanmar

Article 4 of the Convention. Situation of Myanmar migrant workers in Thailand. The Committee has been following with concern for many years the situation of more than 2 million migrant workers in an irregular situation employed in Thailand. In reply to the issues raised previously by the Committee, the Government report, received in September 2012, indicates that five newly established Temporary Passport Issuance Centers have been opened in Thailand to issue documents to undocumented Myanmar workers. A labour attaché has also been assigned to Myanmar's Embassy to address labour affairs issues. The Myanmar and Thailand Governments have held 11 bilateral meetings aimed, inter alia, at: guaranteeing the implementation of the registration process for undocumented workers in Thailand; extending the validity of work permits pending the registration process; ensuring equal remuneration between the nationals of both countries; reducing visa costs; and facilitating the administrative collaboration between the two countries regarding residence requirements, including in respect of children and dependants.

The Committee notes with interest these developments, which are in line with the objective of Article 4 of the Convention calling all ratifying Members to provide mutual assistance with a view to facilitating the execution of their respective laws and regulations on workmen's compensation. The Committee wishes to stress in this respect that active collaboration between Members party to the Convention with a view to solving the challenges related to its practical implementation constitutes the best way to address the problems and seek constructive and prompt solutions. The Committee hopes that the measures taken by the Government in cooperation with the Government of Thailand will help to improve the situation of Myanmar migrant workers in Thailand and their access to workmen's compensation insurance. The Committee requests the Government to indicate further progress in this respect in its next report including statistics on the number of migrant workers in an irregular situation employed in Thailand who are receiving equal treatment under this Convention pursuant to the welcome developments described by the Government, as well as any problems still to be addressed.

Review of the national legislation on social security. The Government indicates that the Social Security Bill amending the 1954 Social Security Act is currently before the Pyihtaungsu Hluttaw (Parliament) and is to be enacted in the very near future. Following the adoption of the new legislation, the Social Security Board will provide new benefits such as free medical care and cash benefits to all insured workers, both national and foreign (section 102 of the Bill). The Committee requests the Government to supply a copy of the new Social Security Act once adopted.

Netherlands

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1962)

Part VIII of the Convention (Maternity benefit). The Committee notes that the Government's report received in August 2011 did not contain replies to specific questions raised in the previous direct request of 2007 concerning provision of maternity medical care to certain categories of protected women and the rules of cost sharing of such care. The Committee notes however that the 45th report of the Netherlands of 2012 on the European Code of Social Security states that maternity care is subjected to out-of-pocket payments per hour or per day, the amount of which depends on the place where the child is born. In the event the child is born in hospital, a higher out-of-pocket payment is applicable if there is no special medical indication. The contribution consists of two parts: a starting tariff of €16 per day and the difference between the day tariff the hospital charges and €112.50, which is charged to compensate for the costs of the maternity ward in the hospital. Only when the mother must be hospitalized due to a medical indication no out-of-pocket payment is applicable. In the case of child birth without medical indication, such as child birth at home or in an outpatient clinic, the mother must pay a contribution on behalf of herself and her child, which amounts to €4 per hour and is indexed yearly.

The Committee wishes to point out in this respect that Articles 10(2) and 49 of the Convention prohibit sharing by the mother of the cost of the medical care provided in the case of pregnancy and child birth and their consequences. The types of such care specified in Articles 10(1)(b) and 49(2) shall be defined in the national legislation and provided to women protected under Part VIII of the Convention free of charge irrespective of the place where child birth takes place – in or outside hospital. The gratuity of this care cannot be subjected to the delivery of an additional special medical indication. In light of these explanations, the Committee would like the Government to assess to what extent these requirements of the Convention are reflected in the current Dutch law and practice, specifying in particular whether all types of medical care mentioned in Article 49(2) and (3), including prenatal care, are covered by maternity care included in the standard health insurance package, what types of care are provided free of charge and what types require for this purpose a special medical indication, and in what form the latter should be delivered. Please calculate the maximum amount of out-of-pocket money the mother will normally be required to contribute when child birth takes place in hospital without a special medical indication, as well as outside hospital, at home or in an outpatient clinic.

According to the Government's 44th report on the European Code of Social Security, maternity care is provided for mother and baby for up to ten days after childbirth; there is no cost sharing for maternity care with medical indication. Please indicate whether, in the case of complications resulting from child birth, for example, maternity care with medical indication continues to be provided after the ten-day period without any cost sharing, in accordance with Article 52 of the Convention.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

Niger

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1966)

For a number of years, the Committee has been noting the constant difficulties with which Niger is faced in trying to implement the provisions of the Convention. These may mainly be attributed to the fact that the national social security scheme was designed to cover the formal sector which, in the present state of the economy, accounts for less than 5 per cent of the economically active population in Niger. According to the World Social Security Report 2010–11, this country is continuing to experience adverse conditions from the standpoint of the low rate of coverage of its social security system, the poor quality of medical care (especially with respect to maternity), and the level of pensions – all this in the context of a low-life expectancy and a very high poverty rate among the population. In these circumstances, the Committee considers that the Convention's objective to guarantee that the greatest number of workers receive the benefits provided for under the Convention for each of the contingencies accepted requires the introduction of more efficient programmes aimed at the informal economy and most vulnerable categories of the population.

The Committee notes that, with a view to providing guidance to States whose social security systems are experiencing difficulties on account of national economic and social conditions and guaranteeing that everyone is entitled to social security, the International Labour Conference adopted the Social Protection Floors Recommendation, 2012 (No. 202), designed to establish all the necessary social security guarantees to prevent and alleviate poverty, vulnerability and social exclusion. In the case of Niger, the Committee notes that the constituent branches of the social security system, for which Niger accepted the obligations under the Convention (Parts V–VIII), provide the necessary institutional mechanisms for building national social protection floors and extending basic social security guarantees to other sections of the population. From this standpoint, the implementation of the Convention and Recommendation No. 202 should be carried out in parallel, by identifying and drawing upon synergies and complementarities. In this context, the Committee notes with interest that the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) introduced in 2012 includes the drafting of a pilot programme aimed at institutionalizing a national social protection floor incorporating the informal sector. In order to attain this, the DWCP provides for, inter alia: integrating social protection policies within a national policy to create a national social protection floor; conducting a survey on social protection needs within the informal economy; and strengthening the capacities of actors in the area of social protection. The Committee would be grateful if the Government could provide in its next report information on the progress made with respect to the implementation of the national social protection floor, specifying the way in which the new social protection mechanisms are harmonized with the existing social security system.

Pakistan

The Committee notes the report of the Government as well as the comments sent by the Pakistan Workers' Federation in a communication dated 21 November 2011. For many years, the Committee and the Government have been maintaining a dialogue regarding the possibility of increasing the wage ceilings giving entitlement to protection in the event of occupational disease so as to ensure the protection afforded by the Convention to a greater number of workers. The Committee notes with satisfaction that, according to the Government report, the condition of wage ceilings was waived in 2007 as a result of an amendment to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report of the number of persons covered by the Act as well as the number of occupational diseases registered and the amount of compensation paid.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1994)

With reference to its observation of 2007, the Committee notes the Government's report received in September 2011 accompanied by observations from the General Confederation of Portuguese Workers (CGTP-IN) and the General Union of Workers (UGT). The Committee also notes the annual reports from Portugal on the application of the European Code of Social Security for the 2008–12 period. According to these sources, even though the minimum standards established by the Convention continue to be applied in the country, recent developments in the national social security system in the context of the economic and financial crisis have featured austerity measures aimed at reducing social expenditure and resulting in greater precarity and poverty. The Committee recalls that the social security system would not fulfil its role if its benefits are incapable of keeping workers above the poverty threshold. In view of the fact that poverty reduction is one of the main objectives of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to send in its next report the most recent and comprehensive statistics on the dynamics of poverty in the country, including data on the number of beneficiaries and the minimum amounts of social benefits in comparison with the poverty threshold. The Government is also requested to demonstrate, on the basis of statistics for the period covered by the next report, that the readjustment of benefits for all protected persons has enabled the real value of benefits in relation to the cost of living to be maintained, in accordance with Article 65(10) of the Convention.

Sao Tome and Principe

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

With reference to its previous comments, the Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government referring to the adoption of Framework Act No. 7 of 2004 on social protection. It notes with satisfaction that, in conformity with Article 2, paragraph 1, of the Convention, the above Act no longer prescribes a maximum age for purposes of affiliation to social security, including with respect to occupational risks. The Committee also notes with satisfaction that the affiliation of foreign workers to social security is not made conditional upon the existence of bilateral conventions on social security with their countries of origin.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the implementing regulations of the above Act are to be adopted soon and would be grateful to be kept informed of any developments in this respect and to receive copies of these regulations once adopted. It trusts that, on this occasion, the Government will duly take into account the provisions of the Convention as well as the questions it had raised previously with respect to the application of Articles 5 (benefits for permanent partial incapacity), 7 (supplementary benefit where the victim needs the constant help of another person), and 9 and 10 (surgical care and supply and normal renewal of such artificial limbs and surgical appliances as are recognized to be necessary) of the Convention.

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention, 1925 (No. 18) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes that the change of administration prevented the finalization of the adoption of the schedule of occupational diseases which should have supplemented Act No. 1/90 on social security. However, the Government indicates that its programme includes the reactivation of this process and the reopening of dialogue with UNDP with a view to the adoption of a schedule of occupational diseases recognized in the country. Recalling that it has been examining the issue of the establishment of the schedule of occupational diseases for many years, the Committee hopes that the Government will spare no effort for the adoption of a schedule of occupational diseases recognized in the country as soon as possible, including at least those enumerated in the schedule attached to Article 2 of the Convention. It also draws the Government's attention to the possibility of having recourse to ILO technical assistance in this respect. This is a fundamental protection which, in accordance with the Convention, has to be guaranteed to men and women workers in the country engaged in certain industries and occupations involving exposure to the risk of contracting certain diseases, which must therefore be duly recognized and compensated by reason of their occupational origin.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Sierra Leone

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 5 of the Convention. Payment of compensation in the form of periodical payments without limit of time. The Government indicates, in reply to the comments made for many years by the Committee, that a Bill on Workmen's Compensation has been formulated but not adopted as yet. It further states that the abovementioned draft legislation reflects the provisions of the Convention concerning the payment of injury benefits throughout the period of contingency and that copy of the revised legislation will be communicated to the ILO as soon as it is adopted. The Committee notes this information as well as the Government's request for technical assistance from the Office in order to accelerate the implementation process of the revised legislation. The Committee expresses the hope that the draft legislation will soon be adopted and requests the Government to provide a copy of it. On the basis of the new legislation, the ILO would certainly be able to discuss with the Government the terms of the requested technical assistance.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Suriname

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1976)

Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention. Payment of benefits abroad. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government, in its report received in September 2011, including the detailed statistical information regarding the nationality, number and occupations of the foreign workers employed in Suriname. The Committee notes with regret that, notwithstanding the repeated observations since the ratification of the Convention by Suriname, the Government has not been able to amend section 6(8) of the Industrial Accidents Act (Decree No. 145 of 1947) which restricts payment of employment injury pensions to beneficiaries resident abroad. The Committee further notes the renewed promises of the Government stating that the Ministry of Labour, Technological Development and Environment will implement the amendments suggested by the Committee in the context of the revision process of the Industrial Accidents Act and report progress in its next report. The Committee trusts that this indeed will be the case this time and that the Government will fulfil its obligations under the Convention in good faith.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

Thailand

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19) (ratification: 1968)

The Committee notes that the Government's report in response to its 2011 observation has not been received. It notes however that, in March 2012, the Government supplied information in reply to the issues raised by the State Enterprise Workers' Relations Confederation (SERC) in 2011 and that, in April 2012, a delegation composed of officials of the Social Security Office of Thailand was received at the ILO with a view to sharing knowledge and discussing questions concerning the implementation of the Convention. The Committee further notes that, on 18 September 2012, the SERC supplied updated information on the application of the Convention in Thailand which was transmitted to the Government on 25 September 2012. The Committee notes from this information that the situation in law has changed due to the replacement of the Social Security Office (SSO) Circular No. RS.0711/W751 of 2001 by SSO Circular No. RN.0607/987 of 2012 following the adoption of a Cabinet resolution of 13 February 2012 on allowing migrant workers in a regular situation to access social security. In April 2012, the Office of Foreign Worker Administration reported that 642,865 workers from Myanmar, Cambodia and Lao People's Democratic Republic had completed the full nationality verification process and that another 95,929 had come in legally through the MOU import process. Furthermore, on 31 May 2012, the Illegal Alien Workers Management Committee (IAWMC) set up a Committee headed by the Permanent Secretary of the Ministry of Labour to investigate and make recommendations on the issues of migrant worker access to social security and work accident compensation benefits. With regard to the situation in practice, the SERC reports that the new circular does not change the previously existing situation. The official statistics on the number of migrant workers who have completed the nationality verification process continue to be conflicting and unreliable. According to the SERC, an estimated 1–2 million migrant workers from Myanmar remain undocumented and are not covered by employment injury insurance, while the Government continues to press ahead with plans to provide alternative compensation schemes to migrant workers distinct from those existing for Thai nationals without consultation with the interested parties.

In view of the complexity of the situation and the developments which have taken place since it was last examined in its lengthy 2011 observation, the Committee urges the Government to provide detailed explanations on all issues raised in its previous and present comments. The Government is requested to supply a full report in 2013 containing information on how the new legal provisions have been implemented, the recommendations made by the Committee set up by the IAWMC, and statistics disaggregated by gender and age, on the number of migrant workers who have completed the nationality verification process, those still undergoing nationality verification, and on the number of migrant workers who became affiliated to the Workmen's Compensation Fund as a result.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

Uganda

Article 5 of the Convention. Periodical payments. The Committee notes the Government's statement according to which the Committee's comments on the Workers' Compensation Act of 2000 and its application have been identified among the key items on the National Agenda for the Labour Advisory Board. The Committee thus hopes that the Government will not fail to ensure that the Labour Advisory Board will consider the issues raised by the Committee in full knowledge of the case and will have before it clear recommendations from the Ministry of Gender, Labour and Social Development on the legislative and practical measures necessary to give full effect to Article 5 of the Convention, which provides for the payment of benefits in case of permanent incapacity or death of the breadwinner in the form of periodical payments without limit of time.

Application of the Convention in practice. Please provide, as required by Part V of the report form, information, including statistics, on the manner in which effect is given to the Convention in practice, specifying, in particular, the number of occupational accidents registered in Uganda as well as the amount of accident compensation benefits paid to the victims.

Uruguay

Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121) (ratification: 1973)

Articles 13, 14 and 18 of the Convention (in conjunction with Article 19 or 20 as the case may be). Level of benefits. Article 21. Review of the rates of long-term cash benefits. In spite of the Committee's repeated requests, the Government does not supply in its reports the statistical information required by the report form adopted by the Governing Body of the ILO on the level of benefits and their adjustment to changes in the cost of living. The lack of this information makes it impossible for the Committee to assess whether the rate of periodical payments guaranteed by national legislation meets the minimum standards established by the Convention in respect of cash benefits for partial incapacity (Article 13), for loss of earning capacity likely to be permanent (Article 14), and in the event of the death of the breadwinner (Article 18). The Committee recalls that in case the Government is experiencing difficulties in compiling the information requested, it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office. The Committee is bound to conclude that the Government is not complying with its obligations under the Convention to provide the necessary information.

Uninsured employers. Pursuant to section 8, second subsection, of Act No. 16074 on industrial accident and occupational disease insurance of 1989, compensation paid by the State Insurance Fund to victims of employment injury employed by uninsured employers is calculated on the basis of the national minimum wage. In its latest report, the Government supplies information on the number and type of benefits paid to such victims and the total amounts to be recovered by the Fund with employers concerned. While taking note of this information, the Committee would like the Government to calculate the replacement rate obtained in the case of an uninsured victim of employment injury having the same earnings and dependants as the standard beneficiary envisaged by Article 19 or 20 of the Convention. Please indicate the number of employers and of their employees exempted from compulsory insurance against employment injuries, and explain the reasons for such exemption.

Article 9. Abolition of the three-day waiting period. Article 11. Medical assistance at home. Referring to its previous comments relating to the three-day waiting period for the payment of cash benefits, provided for in section 19(V) of Act No. 16074 of 1989, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any information on envisaged gradual steps to abolish this waiting period and thus bring its legislation into line with Article 9(3) of the Convention. Furthermore, the Committee observes that section 11(2) of Act No. 16074 of 1989 which Act provides for the transfer of any worker who has suffered an occupational accident from the medical assistance centre to his home and vice versa, does not give effect to Article 10(a) of the Convention which refers to the provision of medical assistance at the home of the worker, if necessary. The Committee is therefore bound to reiterate the hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to give full effect to the abovementioned provisions of the Convention.

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 12 (Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Comoros, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Gabon, Peru, Rwanda); Convention No. 17 (Angola, Argentina, Armenia, Burundi, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Cuba, Djibouti, Greece, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Mexico, Portugal, Rwanda, Slovakia, Syrian Arab Republic, United Kingdom: Falkland Islands (Malvinas), United Kingdom: Jersey, Zambia); Convention No. 18 (Angola, Armenia, Benin, Djibouti, Pakistan, Portugal, Tunisia, Zambia); Convention No. 19 (Angola, Plurinational State of Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Cape Verde, Central African Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Dominica, Dominican Republic, Gabon, Greece, Guatemala, Guyana, Indonesia, Iraq, Kenya, Lebanon, Malawi, Mali, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Serbia, Sudan, Trinidad and Tobago, United Kingdom: British Virgin Islands, United Kingdom: Guernsey, Yemen); Convention No. 24 (Algeria); Convention No. 38 (Djibouti); Convention No. 42 (Burundi, France: New Caledonia, Italy, Slovakia, Turkey, United Kingdom, United Kingdom: Guernsey); Convention No. 44 (Algeria, Bulgaria, France: New Caledonia); Convention No. 102 (Barbados, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Denmark, Ireland, Mauritania, Montenegro, Netherlands, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Serbia, Spain, United Kingdom, United Kingdom: Isle of Man, Uruguay); Convention No. 118 (Plurinational State of Bolivia, Central African Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Guatemala, Guinea, Iraq, Israel, Madagascar, Rwanda, Uruguay); Convention No. 121 (Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Chile, Finland, Montenegro, Netherlands: Aruba, Serbia, Slovenia); Convention No. 128 (Austria, Barbados, Ecuador, Finland, Netherlands, Uruguay); Convention No. 130 (Ecuador, Netherlands, Uruguay); Convention No. 168 (Switzerland).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following States in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 12 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Serbia); Convention No. 17 (Malaysia: Peninsular Malaysia, Netherlands: Aruba, United Kingdom: Guernsey); Convention No. 19 (Bangladesh, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Jamaica, Mauritius, Spain); Convention No. 24 (Poland); Convention No. 25 (Netherlands: Aruba); Convention No. 42 (France, New Zealand); Convention No. 102 (Turkey); Convention No. 118 (Finland); Convention No. 121 (Japan); Convention No. 130 (Finland, Luxembourg); Convention No. 157 (Philippines, Sweden).

Maternity protection

Guatemala

Maternity Protection Convention (Revised), 1952 (No. 103) (ratification: 1989)

Article 1 of the Convention. Coverage. The Committee notes with interest the extension of the geographical coverage of the sickness, maternity and accident programmes of the Guatemalan Social Security Institute (IGSS) to the departments of Petén, Santa Rosa and El Progreso. The inclusion of the three departments in 2011 completed the process of the extension of coverage to the whole of the national territory. While taking due note of the statistical data provided by the Government in its report, the Committee observes that such data still lack the level of detail required to assess the number and categories of women who are effectively covered by the scheme (in relation to the total number of employed women in the various departments of the country). The Committee therefore wishes to emphasize the importance of statistical tools in developing a baseline with a view to the extension of maternity protection to all the categories of women workers protected by the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the progress achieved in developing the new statistical system referred to in the report provided in 2008.

Article 3(2) and (3). Compulsory period of maternity leave. The Committee notes the Government's reply in its report to its request made to legally guarantee the compulsory period of post-natal leave of at least six weeks for all women covered by the Convention and to prohibit the employment of women during their post-natal leave. The Government indicates that the period envisaged in the IGSS regulations exceeds six weeks, as set out in sections 114 and 34, as amended, of Decisions Nos 466 and 468 of the Administrative Board of the IGSS, respectively. The Government adds that in the event of the return to work of a woman before the employer has received notification of the termination of incapacity, the employer is required to notify the Institute within three days; furthermore, in the event that a woman is employed during the post-natal period, the employer shall cover the costs arising out of the unwarranted payment of the allowance, without prejudice to being liable to the penalties envisaged in the Labour Code. The Committee recalls that the compulsory nature of the post-natal leave and the minimum period of leave are protective measures intended to prevent women from resuming work before the end of the six-week period as a result of undue pressure or with a view to material advantage to the detriment of their health. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to guarantee the compulsory nature of the period of post-natal leave, in accordance with the above provisions of the Convention.

Article 4(1). Suspension of benefits. The Committee notes the Government's indications concerning the absence of cases in which benefits have been suspended on the grounds of the clearly anti-social behaviour of the beneficiary and the fact that, were such a case to arise, benefits would be provided once again when the reasons for their suspension had ceased. The Committee observes that on various occasions the Government has referred to the non-application of the respective rules, although this has not resulted in the repeal of sections 48(c), 149(c) and 71(c) of Decisions Nos 410, 466 and 468 of the Administrative Board of the IGSS, respectively. This reason for the suspension of benefits is not in accordance with the provisions of the Convention as it amounts to an unjustified limitation on entitlement to medical and cash benefits. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the above legislation into conformity with the provisions of the Convention.

Article 4(4), (5) and (8). Employer liability. The Committee notes that, despite the fact that it has been the subject of reiterated requests since 1993, the Government has omitted to address the issue of possible reforms of the national legislation. The Committee recalls the importance of a provision establishing that women who do not fulfil the required conditions to receive social security benefits, are to be granted adequate benefits out of social assistance funds (subject to the means test required for such assistance), and not by the employer, with a view to preventing discrimination in the recruitment of women who are of child-bearing age. The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures in the near future to bring the national legislation into conformity with the provisions of the Convention.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 3 (Guinea); Convention No. 103 (Equatorial Guinea).

Social policy

Guinea

Social Policy (Basic Aims and Standards) Convention, 1962 (No. 117) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Parts I and II of the Convention. Improvement of standards of living. The Committee requests that the Government provide indications of the way in which the improvement of standards of living is regarded as the principal objective in the planning of economic development within the strategy to combat poverty (Article 2 of the Convention). In this regard, the Committee reminds the Government that, pursuant to Article 1(I) of the Convention, "all policies shall be primarily directed to the well-being and development of the population".

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 82 (United Kingdom: British Virgin Islands); Convention No. 117 (Guatemala, Zambia).

Migrant workers

Barbados

Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 7 and 9 of the Convention. Free services rendered by public employment agencies and transfer of remittances. The Committee notes the communication from the Congress of Trade Unions and Staff Associations of Barbados (CTUSAB), dated 19 June 2008, in which it expresses concerns relating to the Farm Labour Programme between Barbados and Canada, which still employs thousands of Barbadians. According to the CTUSAB, 25 per cent of the workers' earnings are being remitted to the Barbados Government directly from Canada, 5 per cent of which is retained by the Government for administrative expenses. The CTUSAB also maintains that the costs of going to Canada, as well as pension contributions for both Barbados and Canada and medical contributions in Canada are immediately deducted from their pay, which is creating hardship for the workers concerned. In the view of the CTUSAB, the system must be reviewed so as not to disadvantage the workers under the programme.

The Committee notes that the Government has not replied to the comments from the CTUSAB. The Committee recalls that under Article 9 of the Convention, ratifying States undertake to permit the transfer of such part of the earnings and savings of the migrant for employment as the migrant may desire. Requiring migrant workers to remit 25 per cent of their earnings to the Government would, in the view of the Committee, be contrary to the spirit of Article 9 of the Convention. Moreover, the Committee recalls that Article 7(2) of the Convention provides that services rendered by public employment services in connection with the recruitment, introduction and placing of migrants for employment are to be provided free of charge. The Committee draws the attention of the Government to the fact that charging workers for purely administrative costs of recruitment, introduction and placement is prohibited under the Convention (General Survey of 1999 on migrant workers, paragraph 170). The Committee urges the Government:

- (i) to undertake a review of the Farm Labour Programme between Barbados and Canada, in cooperation with the workers' and employers' organizations;
- (ii) to explain the reasons for requiring migrant workers under the programme to remit 25 per cent to the Government, including 5 per cent for administrative costs; and
- (iii) to ensure that purely administrative costs of recruitment, introduction and placement are not borne by the workers recruited under the programme, and that migrants for employment are permitted to transfer their earnings or such part of their earnings and savings as they desire.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Cameroon

Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143) (ratification: 1978)

Article 9(1) and (2) of the Convention. Rights arising out of past employment. The Committee previously raised issues relating to the difficulties encountered by migrant workers in claiming their rights arising out of past employment, such as remuneration and social security when their contracts of employment were declared null and void. The Committee notes the Government's general reply that the labour legislation is rather generous in this regard and that a number of measures have been taken to ensure respect for migrant workers' rights. The Government also states that according to statistics the number of foreign workers who are illegally employed is very low and that there is no information on the number and nature of the complaints submitted to the labour inspection services by migrant workers in an irregular situation. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that for the right to equal treatment to be enjoyed in practice, it is important that effective mechanisms are in place to address situations of non-respect of this right, including accessible and effective complaints procedures for migrant workers. The Committee does not consider the low number of complaints to be an indication that such effective mechanisms exist. Recalling the Government's previous indication that recourse to the labour inspectorate is the only way for workers whose contract has been declared null and void to claim their rights, the Committee urges the Government to examine any obstacles faced by those migrant workers to submit claims to the labour inspectorate in relation to rights derived from past employment, and to provide information on the progress made in this regard. The Committee also, once again, urges the Government to take the necessary legislative measures to ensure that migrant workers who have been unable to regularize their situation are not deprived of their rights that have been lawfully acquired, and that they and their families enjoy equality of treatment with migrant workers lawfully admitted into the country in respect of rights arising out of past employment as regards remuneration, social security and other benefits, in accordance with Article 9(1) and (2) of the Convention. Please provide statistics on the number of migrant workers in an irregular situation, including those migrant workers whose contracts have been declared null and void.

Article 10. Exercise of trade union rights. The Committee recalls that section 10(1) and (2) of the Labour Code provides that foreign nationals are required to have resided for not less than five years in the territory before being allowed to establish a trade union and take positions of responsibility for its administration or leadership. The Committee had requested clarification from the Government regarding whether this requirement also applied to foreign nationals wishing to join a trade union. The Committee notes the Government's reply that the draft law on trade unions has taken this issue into account. Recalling the Government's previous statement that membership in a trade union is free for both nationals and migrant workers and that the issue would be addressed in the context of the revision of the Labour Code, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that any future legislation explicitly provides for the right of foreign workers to join a trade union on an equal footing with nationals, without being subject to any residence requirements or other preconditions, and to provide information on any developments in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

China

Hong Kong Special Administrative Region

Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97) (notification: 1997)

The Committee notes the Government's report in reply to the request made by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2012. It also notes the joint observations, dated 31 August 2012, of the Hong Kong Confederation of Trade Unions (HKCTU) and the Hong Kong Federation of Asian Domestic Workers Union (FADWU), which were sent to the Government for its comments.

Statistics. The Committee notes from the Government's report that as of 31 May 2012, there were in the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (SAR) 58,974 foreign professionals, 307,151 foreign domestic workers (4,771 men and 302,380 women), and 3,452 immigrant workers entering under the Supplementary Labour Scheme (SLS) (largely from mainland China). As of 31 May 2012, 2,216 applicants also entered under the Quality Migrant Admission Scheme with 1,713 applicants from mainland China and other applicants coming mainly from Asia Pacific, Europe and North America. The large majority of the domestic workers are from Indonesia (143 men and 151,852 women) and the Philippines (3,835 men and 144,096 women). Other foreign domestic workers are from India (460 men and 1,932 women), Sri Lanka (136 men and 819 women) and Thailand (38 men and 3,155 women); 685 domestic workers (159 men and 526 women) originate from "other countries". The Committee notes from the communication of HKCTU and FADWU that migrant domestic workers also come from Nepal. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistical data, disaggregated by sex and country of origin, as well as sector of employment, on the number of migrant workers in Hong Kong SAR.

Article 2 of the Convention. Information and services for migrant workers. The Committee previously noted the Government's efforts to provide migrant workers access free of charge to all of the services provided by the Government, including a telephone inquiry service, consultation and conciliation services, and interpretation services. Information about rights and benefits under the applicable legislation and the individual employment contract as well as on the relevant complaints mechanisms is also being provided free of charge through various media, including publications and brochures in several languages. The Committee notes that HKCTU and FADWU point to some difficulties regarding the provision of these services to migrant workers, including the functioning of the telephone inquiry service, and the need for effective measures to ensure that the contents of the standard employment contract are understood fully by all migrant workers. They also recommend that interpretation services be provided when migrant workers want to file a complaint with the Labour Department. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that migrant workers are able to benefit effectively from the services, including interpretation services, and information provided to them, and whether any additional steps are being taken to ensure that migrant workers have a clear understanding of the contents of their employment contract.

Article 6(1)(a)(i). Equality of treatment of foreign domestic workers with respect to remuneration and conditions of work. For a number of years, the Committee has been following up on the impact of measures taken by the Government to increase the monthly minimum allowable wage (MAW) of foreign domestic workers, after its reduction by HK$400 in 2002, and the suspension until 31 July 2013 of the obligation for employers of all immigrant workers to pay an Employee Retraining Levy (ERL) of HK$400. The Committee notes from the Government's report that from 1 June 2010 to 31 May 2012, 5 per cent (342 cases) of the total number of claims from foreign domestic workers lodged with the Labour Department involved underpayment of wages; of these, 150 cases were settled through conciliation while the remaining 192 cases were referred to the Labour Tribunal or the Minor Employment Claims Adjudication Board for adjudication. Noting that the suspension of the ERL expires in July 2013, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the ERL is not having a disproportionate impact on the wages of foreign domestic workers, once the ERL again becomes operational.

Minimum wages. The Committee notes that HKCTU and FADWU are of the view that when taking into consideration the rate of inflation in Hong Kong SAR, the monthly MAW of migrant domestic workers has increased only very little compared to the level in 2002 (HK$3,670), before the ERL was introduced. The Committee notes that for employment contracts signed by parties starting 20 September 2012, an increased monthly MAW of HK$3,920 and food allowance of HK$875 shall apply. Workers with contracts before that date will be entitled only to the previous monthly MAW and food allowance. The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it noted that section 7(2) of the Minimum Wage Ordinance (MWO) No. 15 of 2010 excluded in practice all foreign domestic workers due to the mandatory live-in requirement (paragraph 3 of the standard employment contract). The Committee also noted that the hourly statutory minimum wage under the MWO was set at HK$28. The Committee notes the Government's reply that the remuneration package of foreign domestic workers includes, beyond the MAW, a range of in-kind benefits which are not available to non-live-in workers, including free accommodation and a food allowance. The Committee notes however that HKCTU and FADWU refer to alleged reports of sub-standard accommodation and express concerns at the lack of a mechanism in place to measure or calculate the costs of accommodation. The Committee recalls that one of the reasons given at the time by the Legislative Council to exclude live-in domestic workers from the MWO was their distinctive working patterns (around-the-clock work) and the difficulty in keeping a record of hours of work and calculating wages accordingly. The Committee takes due note of the Government's explanation that the remuneration package of domestic workers includes additional benefits in kind but draws the Government's attention to the fact that while the treatment applied by the State to migrant workers does not have to be identical to that enjoyed by nationals, it should nonetheless be equivalent in its effects (General Survey on migrant workers, 1999, paragraph 371). Bearing in mind the particular working conditions of foreign domestic workers, who constitute the overwhelming majority of the migrant workers in Hong Kong SAR, and who are primarily women, the Committee considers that an in-depth review of the working conditions and remuneration of these workers is required so as to determine whether or not in practice, female foreign domestic workers are subject to discrimination based on sex or nationality and to less favourable treatment than that applied to nationals and other categories of migrant workers with regard to remuneration. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take steps to examine, in consultation with workers' and employers' organizations, existing inequalities in the remuneration package between local and foreign workers arising from the applicable laws and regulations concerning foreign domestic workers so as to verify that no less favourable treatment is being applied to foreign domestic workers than to nationals, and to report on the results achieved. The Committee also requests the Government to clarify the reasons for applying the new MAW and food allowance only to contracts signed as of 20 September 2012, and to clarify how the cost of accommodation for live-in workers is being calculated.

Conditions of work. The Committee previously noted that one of the underlying reasons to exclude live-in domestic workers from the scope of the MWO included the fundamental erosion of the policy on foreign domestic workers if standard working hours would be prescribed and the live-in requirement removed. The Committee recalls the concerns expressed by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) regarding the particular vulnerability of certain groups of foreign domestic workers, especially those of Indonesian and Nepali origin, to violations of their statutory rights and employment contracts, including denial of rest days, excessive working hours (average of 16 hours a day), and sexual and physical abuse. The Committee notes that the Government's report merely states that during the reporting period, 128 reports of claims of foreign domestic workers regarding abuse by employers including rape, indecent assault as well as wounding and serious assault were handled by the police according to the laws of Hong Kong, without providing further information regarding the outcome of these claims for both domestic workers and employers. The Committee further notes the observations of HKCTU and FADWU regarding alleged abuses relating to conditions of work of immigrant workers who entered Hong Kong SAR under the Supplementary Labour Scheme to the extent that they fall within the scope of the definition of migrant for employment set out in Article 11 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the effective monitoring by the competent authorities of the working conditions of foreign domestic workers, and whether any consideration has been given to examining the working patterns of foreign domestic workers with a view to ensuring that no less favourable treatment is applied to them as compared to nationals and other migrant workers with respect to conditions of work.

Article 6(1)(d) and Parts III and IV of the report form. Enforcement. The Committee notes that from 1 June 2010 to 31 May 2012 the Labour Department handled 6,726 claims from foreign domestic workers concerning alleged breaches of the Employment Ordinance or the terms of the Standard Employment Contract by their employers; of the cases that could not be settled by the Labour Department's conciliation efforts, 1,792 were subsequently referred to the Labour Tribunal or the Minor Employment Claims Adjudication Board for adjudication. The Labour Department also issued 236 summonses involving underpayment of wages or other breaches of the Employment Ordinance by employers of migrant workers (including 233 summonses against employers of foreign domestic workers). During the same period, the Immigration Department prosecuted 61 employers for aiding and abetting foreign domestic workers to breach their conditions of stay by taking up illegal employment. The Committee had previously noted concerns that the rule requiring foreign domestic workers to leave Hong Kong SAR within two weeks of the expiration or premature termination of their employment contract ("two-week rule") drove workers to remain in or to access new employment in abusive conditions. The Committee notes that for the period under review, 56,402 applications of foreign domestic workers to change workplace were approved, while 372 cases were refused, largely due to the applicants' failure to meet the criteria for change of employment. During the same period, all 10,050 applications for extension of stay from foreign domestic workers to pursue civil or criminal proceedings were approved. In this regard, the Committee notes that the HKCTU and FADWU reiterate concerns regarding the length of the proceedings which, combined with the fear of deportation, resulted in many domestic workers being discouraged from filing a complaint; the prohibition of foreign domestic workers taking up employment during the remaining time of their stay also resulted in workers withdrawing complaints or accepting lower settlements due to the high costs involved. The Committee notes the Government's statement that all complaints lodged will be promptly investigated and prosecution instituted when there is sufficient evidence and the foreign domestic worker is willing to act as a prosecution witness. The Committee requests the Government to examine the difficulties encountered by foreign domestic workers in processing their claims on an equal footing with nationals in accordance with Article 6(1)(d) of the Convention, and to provide information on the results achieved. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on any additional measures taken or envisaged to further strengthen the inspection and enforcement of the rights of foreign domestic workers under the Employment Ordinance and the Standard Employment Contract, and to ensure that migrant workers who have applied for an extension of their stay due to legal proceedings have access to effective and speedy dispute resolution so as to reduce costs incurred during the period that the legal proceedings are pending. Please continue to provide information on the number of applications for extension of stay beyond the permissible two weeks due to legal proceedings and the number of applications to change employer, and the reasons for any refusals by the Immigration Department. The Committee also asks the Government to continue to provide information on the number and nature of claims, including underpayment claims, submitted by foreign domestic workers and other migrant workers under the Supplementary Labour Scheme to the Labour Department, the Labour Tribunal and the Minor Employment Claims Adjudication Board, and their outcome for both workers and employers, relating to violations of the relevant laws and regulations and the Standard Employment Contract.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

France

Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97) (ratification: 1954)

The Committee recalls the observations of the General Confederation of Labour (CGT), dated 30 August 2011, and the Government's reply thereto received 20 December 2011. It also notes the Government's reports received 5 December 2011 and 8 August 2012, and the observations of the CGT, dated 31 August 2012, which were sent to the Government for its comments and in which the CGT restates its concerns with respect to Articles 3, 6 and 7 of the Convention.

Article 3 of the Convention. Misleading propaganda regarding immigration and migrant workers. The Committee recalls that under the terms of Article 3, any State for which the Convention is in force undertakes to take all appropriate steps against misleading propaganda relating to emigration and immigration. Such measures should also aim to address stereotypes of migrant workers such as being more susceptible to crime, violence and diseases or regarding their educational and employment abilities (General Survey on migrant workers, 1999, paragraph 217). The Committee notes that the CGT refers to the existing prejudices and stigmatization of the migrant population in France, including discriminatory stereotypes regarding people belonging to the Roma community, and highlights the need for greater efforts to address such prejudices and the dissemination of false information regarding immigrant workers. In this context, the CGT draws particular attention to government policies regarding the dismantling of Roma camps and the expulsion of Roma people, in particular those originating from Bulgaria and Romania, which in its view fail to meet the Government's obligations under the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's general reply that the measures aimed at addressing misleading propaganda include legislative and practical measures to combat racism and xenophobia and measures against trafficking of women. Regarding the expulsion of Roma people, the Government details the measures under the relevant legislation relating to the conditions under which nationals from the European Union (EU) may reside in France or may be removed (section L.121-1 of the Code of Entry and Stay of Foreigners and the Right to Asylum (CESEDA)) and the accompanying measures to assist voluntary returnees, mostly nationals from Romania, to reintegrate in their country of origin. The Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to its comments on the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), noting that the dismantling of the Roma camps is continuing without alternative solutions being sought for housing, thereby reinforcing the marginalization, stigmatization and prejudices of which members of the Roma community are already victims, and creating obstacles to their social integration. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide full information on the measures taken, in cooperation with the social partners and other relevant stakeholders where appropriate, to prevent and combat prejudices regarding immigration and stigmatization and stereotyping of migrant workers, including the Roma population, in an effective manner, and to provide detailed information on the results achieved.

Article 6. Equality of treatment. The Committee previously noted the developments in relation to France's immigration law and policy, in particular Act No. 2006-911 of 2006 on immigration and integration and Act No. 2007-1631 of 2007 concerning immigration control, integration and asylum, the new measures taken to facilitate the reception and integration of certain categories of migrants for employment, the measures to improve the housing conditions of the migrant population, and the bilateral agreements and arrangements regarding youth mobility and organizing regular migration and promoting co-development and cooperation. At the same time, the Committee observed that major problems appeared to exist with respect to the integration of migrant workers, including negative perceptions of the immigrant population, widespread discrimination and poor housing conditions. The Committee notes that the CGT raises concerns at the increased stringency of the legislative and normative framework concerning immigration and migrant workers, and its main focus on highly qualified occupations whereas migrant workers already in the territory are primarily employed in low-wage sectors with difficult working conditions (notably, cleaning, textile, restaurant, security and construction). According to the CGT, the measures tightening the rules on the delivery and renewal of residence permits and reducing regular immigration opportunities also encourage irregular migration and drive migrant workers and their families into abusive situations.

The Committee notes the Government's reply that new policy orientations regarding labour migration have been defined in order to take into account the impact of the economic crisis on the labour market, and to adopt a qualitative and selective approach giving priority to the integration of jobseekers already in the labour market regardless of nationality. The Committee notes the policies to attract highly skilled foreign workers, including Act No. 2011-672 of 16 June 2011 concerning immigration, integration and nationality introducing the "European Union (EU) Blue Card" for highly qualified nationals from countries outside the EU ("third country nationals"). The new legislation also simplifies the procedures regarding the removal of foreigners and amends several provisions concerning the entry and residence of foreigners. According to the Government, the objective of the approach is to ensure the full application of the rules regarding work permits while at the same time ensuring equality of treatment regarding conditions of work and protecting workers from being exploited. The Government states that foreign workers and members of their families lawfully residing in France enjoy equality of treatment with nationals with respect to conditions of work, remuneration, trade union rights and social protection. The Government also refers to the Charter for Diversity in Enterprises, launched in 2004 with the support of the social partners, which the Committee addressed in the context of Convention No. 111. Regarding the situation of Roma of foreign origin, the Government indicates that the Roma are considered as nationals of the country of which they have the nationality and that the transitional arrangements requiring nationals from Bulgaria and Romania – from where most of the Roma population living in France originate – to have a work permit, apply until 2014. The Committee notes that pursuant to the Decree of 1 October 2012, the list of occupations for which Bulgarian and Romanian nationals are eligible to apply has been enlarged from 150 to 291 occupations. While taking due note of the Government's statement that the reception and integration of migrant workers, in particular at the initial stage of immigration, is a priority in its immigration policy and of the importance attached to the principle of equality of treatment between migrant workers lawfully in the country and nationals, the Committee recalls that the provisions of Article 6 of the Convention not only envisage equal treatment in law, but also in practice. Noting the effect of stereotypes and prejudices regarding the immigrant population on the effective enjoyment in practice of equality of treatment without discrimination as to race, sex, religion and nationality in respect of the matters referred to in Article 6(1)(a) to (d) of the Convention, the Committee also draws the Government's attention to its comments on Convention No. 111. The Committee requests the Government to indicate in detail the relevant legal provisions applying no less favourable treatment to migrant workers than that which applies to nationals, with respect to the matters enumerated in Article 6(1)(a) to (d) of the Convention, indicating any differences that may exist between the various categories of immigrant workers. The Government is also requested to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that the principle of equal treatment regarding these matters is applied effectively in practice, including specific measures regarding women migrants. Please include information on any complaints brought by migrant workers to the competent authorities, including the Rights Ombud and the courts or any other competent body to ensure the application of the national legislation relevant to the Convention. Furthermore, the Committee encourages the Government to assess the impact of its migration and integration policy on immigrant workers and their families, distinguishing between the different types of permits authorizing employment, with regard to Articles 3 and 6 of the Convention, and asks the Government to provide information in this regard.

Article 6(1)(a)(iii) and (d). Accommodation and legal proceedings. The Committee notes with interest the decision of the Supreme Administrative Court of 11 April 2012 (Conseil d'Etat Ass 11 April 2012, GISTI et FAPIL, No. 322326) repealing section 1 of Decree No. 2008-908 of 8 September 2008 inserting section L300-2 in the Code of Construction and Housing which imposes the condition on certain categories of foreigners that they should have resided for an uninterrupted period of two years in France to benefit from the enforceable right to decent housing. Considering that the provisions of Article 6(1)(a)(iii) and (d) of the Convention could be directly invoked by individuals, the Supreme Administrative Court ruled that the Decree was not in conformity with the Convention in submitting the enforceable right to housing of certain migrant workers to a condition of two years of uninterrupted residence in France, a condition which is not applied to nationals; and, by excluding from its scope of application certain residence permits, such as those delivered to persons who could be migrants for employment within the meaning of Article 11(1) of the Convention, such as temporary workers and employees on assignment. The Court also considered that the Decree ignored the equality principle by excluding these residence permit holders from the enforceable right to housing. The Committee further notes the Government's statement that the housing policy, which addresses all population groups regardless of nationality, concerns a significant number of foreigners due to overrepresentation of non-nationals among the population facing difficulties in gaining access to housing. Recalling the problems relating to housing conditions of the immigrant population previously noted by the Committee, and the Government's indication regarding the difficulty in proving that discrimination with respect to housing has occurred, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the various measures taken or envisaged to improve the housing conditions of migrant workers so as to ensure that in practice, migrant workers are not treated less favourably than nationals with regard to access to accommodation, and to provide information on the results achieved. Please also include information on any measures taken to address the difficulties encountered in proving that discrimination with respect to housing has occurred and on the results achieved.

Articles 2 and 7(2). Free services. The Committee notes the concerns expressed by the CGT at the high fees for migrant workers due to the medical examination required upon entry into France and the fees charged by the National Agency for Foreigners and Integration (OFII) to foreign workers for the delivery or renewal of the residence title authorizing employment. The Committee notes the Government's reply that administrative costs relating to the recruitment, introduction and placement of foreign workers and the costs for the medical examination are charged to the employer, and that the only costs charged to the migrant worker are the taxes due to OFII for the issuing or the renewal of the residence permit authorizing employment. The Committee notes Circular No. NOR IOCL1201043C of 12 January 2012 fixing the taxes required from the employer for the recruitment of a foreign worker, and from the foreign worker for the delivery or renewal of their residence permit authorizing employment. Furthermore, the Committee notes that OFII is the responsible public service for the reception of newly arriving foreigners with a long-term residence visa authorizing employment as a wage earner, and participates in the integration process of these foreigners. It is also the only "one-stop shop" for the introduction of young professionals, newly arriving "employees on assignment" and foreigners with temporary residence permits for "competencies and talents". With regard to temporary residence permits for wage earners and temporary workers, the OFII assists the enterprise with the introduction procedure, after the contract of employment has been approved by the Service for Foreign Labour. The Committee recalls that Article 7(2) of the Convention and Article 4 of Annex I require that the services rendered by the public employment service in connection with the recruitment, introduction or placement of migrants for employment are to be rendered free of charge. Article 2(b) of Annex I defines introduction as any operations for ensuring or facilitating the arrival in or admission to a territory of persons who have been recruited within the meaning of Article 2(a) of Annex I. Noting that it is the long-term residence visa that authorizes the foreigner to work, and taking into account OFII's functions regarding the introduction of third country nationals who are wage earners and the taxes due by the foreign worker to OFII for the delivery or the renewal of a residence permit, the Committee notes that it is unclear whether the services provided by OFII in connection with the introduction of foreign workers are services within the meaning of Article 7(2) of the Convention and Article 4 of Annex I which should be rendered free of charge. In these circumstances, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the specific services provided by OFII regarding the recruitment, introduction and placement of migrant workers, and any costs charged to the migrant workers who benefit from these services, and to indicate which services are covered by the fees related to the issuing or renewal of the residence permit authorizing employment.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Israel

Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97) (ratification: 1953)

Statistics on migrant workers. The Committee notes from the Government's report that in 2011, 5,470 permits were issued to migrant workers in the construction sector (with 83 per cent of the workers coming from China and 6 per cent from the Republic of Moldova); 24,582 permits to migrant workers in the agriculture sector (with 95 per cent of the workers coming from Thailand); and 45,886 permits to migrant workers in the nursing care sector (with 39 per cent of the workers coming from the Philippines, 16 per cent from the Republic of Moldova, 14 per cent from India and 13 per cent from Nepal). There are also skilled migrant workers in the industrial and restaurant sectors and foreign specialists. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistical data, disaggregated by sex, nationality and sector of employment, on the number of migrant workers in Israel.

Article 6 of the Convention. Equality of treatment (foreign caregivers). The Committee recalls its previous observation raising concerns that the implementation of the Entry into Israel Law (Amendment No. 21) of 16 May 2011 – making it possible to restrict the transfer of foreign workers between employers by issuing work permits that are limited to certain geographical regions or to certain sub-branches of the caregiving sector – could result in reinstating the "restrictive employment relationship" of migrant workers with their employers, previously criticized by the High Court of Justice in 2006. The Committee also recalls the decision of the High Court of Justice in Yolanda Gloten v. the National Labour Court (HCJ 1678/07) of 2009 excluding live-in caregivers from the applicability of the Hours of Work and Rest Law 1951 and the concerns expressed by the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers' Associations (IUF) that the Gloten judgment facilitated the application of a discriminatory and inferior legal regime to the work of women migrants. The Committee notes the Government's statement that there are 63,000 female Israeli care workers in the long-term nursing sector who are, unlike foreign caregivers, mostly employed in part-time jobs through nursing care companies. The Government also details the various reasons for the dependency of the care sector on the work of live-in foreign caregivers and the difficulties related to the period of notice by caregivers who want to leave the employer with a disability or the elderly employer they care for. The Government further indicates that 18,801 foreign workers in long-term nursing care moved between authorized employers in 2011, and that there were no refusals regarding requests to change employers.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that a governmental staff committee will submit recommendations regarding an appropriate legislative framework guaranteeing adequate pay and favourable working conditions for caregivers, after which a hearing will take place in the High Court of Justice. The Government also indicates that the Population and Immigration Authority (PIBA) of the Ministry of Interior is working on a new set of regulations and procedures for the caregiving sector. While the text of these regulations and procedures are not yet at its disposal, the Committee notes from the Foreign Workers' Rights Handbook, to which the Government refers in its report and which was last updated on 1 October 2012, that foreign caregivers continue to be required to reside in the homes of their employers and that live-out arrangements or part-time employment are prohibited. Foreign caregivers are also required to respect a special and longer period of prior written notice (varying from seven days to one month), except in "circumstances in which it is unreasonable to require continued employment". The written notice is to be given to the recruitment agency as well as to the employer or the employer's representative. The Committee notes that a foreign caregiver who leaves the employer without prior written notice or before the minimum notification period may be liable to deportation after a hearing by the PIBA. Taking due note of the Government's detailed explanations regarding the heavy dependence of the care sector on the work of live-in foreign caregivers, the Committee considers it all the more important in the context of the proposed reforms that proper working conditions, including remuneration, hours of work and overtime arrangements, and effective and accessible complaints mechanisms and means of redress, are being ensured for foreign caregivers so as to ensure treatment no less favourable than that which applies to Israeli caregivers in respect of the matters referred to in Article 6(1)(a)–(d) of the Convention. Considering that the caregiving sector is the largest sector in which foreign workers are employed, the large majority of whom are women, the Committee urges the Government to make every effort to ensure that the proposed legislative framework guaranteeing adequate pay and favourable working conditions for caregivers and the regulations and procedures to be developed by the PIBA are in accordance with the provisions of Article 6 of the Convention, and to expedite this process. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the outcome of this process, including copies of the text of any new regulations and procedures adopted or proposed as well as on the outcome of the further hearing in the High Court of Justice. The Committee also requests the Government to provide copies of any regulations adopted by the Minister of Interior pursuant to the amendments to the Entry into Israel Law, and information on the number of transfers to another employer of foreign workers in the caregiving sector requested on the basis that it would be unreasonable to continue employment, the outcome of these requests, and the applicable procedures to address such requests.

Enforcement and access to legal proceedings. Further to the above, the Committee recalls the exclusion of the largest group of foreign workers, foreign domestic caregivers who are primarily women, from the protection of the Commissioner for the Rights of Foreign Workers, except in cases of human trafficking, conditions of enslavement or forced labour, and cases of sexual abuse, violence or sexual harassment. The Committee had also noted that the monitoring of the employment relationship between these workers and their employers was apparently left mainly to licensed recruitment agencies. The Committee notes the Government's reply that the Commissioner can suggest that the worker apply for mediation and that there is no obstacle for an employee in the nursing care sector to institute legal proceedings against the employer other than through the Commissioner. The Committee recalls the concerns expressed by the IUF that lower labour courts would be compelled to reject lawsuits from foreign caregivers for overtime pay due to the Gloten judgment. Recalling that foreign caregivers should be able to enjoy and claim effectively their rights on an equal footing with nationals, as provided in Article 6(1)(d) of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to provide full information on the manner in which foreign caregivers lawfully in the country can assert their rights in respect of the matters referred to in the Convention in practice and claim compensation. The Committee also requests the Government to include information on the manner in which Israeli caregivers can assert and claim their rights and on the number and nature of complaints filed by foreign and national caregivers with the judicial and administrative bodies and their outcome. The Committee also asks the Government to continue to provide statistics on the number and nature of violations of the relevant laws and regulations identified and addressed by the various responsible authorities. Recalling the Government's intention to study with a view to applying, in cooperation with the social partners, the best practices for the treatment of foreign workers in line with the provisions of the Convention, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to indicate any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143) (ratification: 1979)

Articles 10, 12 and 14(a) of the Convention. National policy on equality of opportunity and treatment, and free choice of employment. For a number of years, the Committee has addressed the issue of the existing policy of “Kenyanization” of employment which was considered by the Committee as contrary to the principle established by the Convention of equality of opportunity and treatment between national and foreign workers provided that foreign workers are residing lawfully in the country of employment. The Committee notes with interest that section 5 of the Employment Act 2007 provides that the Minister, labour officers and the Industrial Court shall promote and guarantee equality of opportunity for a person who is a migrant worker or a member of his or her family lawfully within Kenya. Section 5 also prohibits direct and indirect discrimination on the grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, nationality, ethnic or social origin, disability, pregnancy, mental status or HIV status, with respect to recruitment, training, promotion, terms and conditions of employment, termination of employment or other matters arising out of employment. Besides, it establishes that an employer shall pay his or her employees equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee further notes the adoption of the National Gender and Equality Commission Act, 2011 and the Citizens and Foreign Nationals Management Service Act, 2011. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which section 5 of the Employment Act 2007 is applied in practice, namely how it is translated into a national policy designed to promote and to guarantee equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of employment and occupation, social security, trade union and cultural rights and individual and collective freedoms for persons who, as migrant workers or as members of their families are lawfully within its territory, as provided in Articles 10 and 12(a)–(g) of the Convention. Please provide information on the functioning of and the measures adopted on these issues by the National Gender and Equality Commission and the Citizens and Foreign Nationals Management Service.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Netherlands

Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the observations of the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV), dated 20 August 2012, which were forwarded to the Government for its comments.

Article 6 of the Convention. Equality of treatment with respect to remuneration and enforcement. The Committee notes from the Government’s report that the most important change in the Government’s migration policy has been the free movement of workers to and from eight Central and Eastern European countries which joined the European Union (EU) in 2004. The Committee notes the results from the annual report of the labour inspection services on violations of the Foreign Nationals Employment Act (VAW) and the statutory minimum wage (WML). It notes that administrative penalties were introduced for violations of the VAW from 1 January 2005 and of the WML from 1 January 2007, as a condition for allowing the free movement of workers from Central and Eastern European countries. The Committee notes that in 2010, the labour inspection services detected 564 workers being paid below the statutory minimum wage, approximately 50 per cent of whom came from new EU Member States; 40 per cent were of Polish nationality and approximately 20 per cent of the workers were Dutch nationals. According to the Government, the data for 2011 were probably comparable to those of 2010. The Committee notes that the FNV draws attention to the lack of capacity of the labour inspectorate to monitor the working conditions of migrant workers and considers that the inspection services should concentrate on monitoring the payment of equal wages to nationals and migrant workers for work of equal value, rather than just the statutory minimum wage. The Committee notes that in its observations on the Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94), the FNV indicates that the wage difference between the wage set by collective agreement and the statutory minimum wage can be as high as 20 per cent in labour-intensive sectors of the Dutch economy. Noting that the FNV considers that the full implementation of Convention No. 94, would substantially contribute to the prevention of discrimination between migrant workers and nationals, the Committee also refers the Government to its comments on this Convention. Furthermore, the Committee takes note of the recommendations of the FNV, in its letter of 21 June 2011 to the Minister of Social Affairs and Employment, to improve the knowledge and awareness of migrant workers from Central and Eastern Europe of their rights and terms and conditions of employment, to provide an information “log book” to migrant workers upon arrival, to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspection services to undertake “on-site” inspections, and to create a greater monitoring role for the social partners. The Committee requests the Government to reply to the observations raised by the FNV and recalls that Article 6 of the Convention requires ratifying States to apply, without discrimination based on nationality, race, religion or sex, to migrant workers lawfully in the country, treatment no less favourable than that which applies to its own nationals in respect of remuneration, in law and in practice. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to further strengthen the capacity of the labour inspectorate to monitor equal treatment regarding wages paid to migrant workers and nationals beyond the minimum wage.

Article 3 and Annex I, Article 3. Measures against misleading propaganda and supervision of private agencies. The Committee notes that, according to the FNV, there are 300,000 workers from Central and Eastern Europe in the Netherlands, half of them working for temporary agencies, and recalls the importance of measures to protect migrant workers from misleading information stemming from intermediaries or employers, in accordance with Article 3 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that combating fraud in the labour market is one of the priorities of the Ministry of Social Affairs and Employment and that as of 1 January 2013, the administrative fines for labour law offences will be substantially increased. The Government also refers to the launching by the Ministry of Social Affairs and Employment of a multidisciplinary project which aims to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspectorate to tackle “mala fide” temporary work agencies, and to analyse policy measures. The first concrete measure resulting from the project, in which the FNV also participates, was the establishment of a hotline placed within the labour inspectorate, on “mala fide” temporary work agencies for all citizens and companies. The Committee notes that the FNV, while supporting the measures taken by the Government, draws attention to some persistent abusive arrangements by “mala fide” agencies in the construction and transport sectors, leading to discrimination against migrant workers and false competition in the labour market. The FNV further states that the system of self-regulation of private recruitment agencies, which became fully effective in January 2007 and which was to be evaluated in 2008, is not yet well functioning and that certified agencies do not always comply with the rules either. The Committee asks the Government to reply to the observations made by the FNV and to continue to provide information on the supervision of temporary work agencies and the results achieved. Please also indicate whether any code of conduct or other guidelines have been put in place to prevent the use of misleading propaganda leading to abusive practices by temporary work agencies as well as abuse and discrimination by private agencies of migrant workers.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Philippines

Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97) (ratification: 2009)

The Committee notes the Government’s first and second reports and the legislation and statistical information attached thereto.

Statistics on migration flows. The Committee notes that the Philippines is mainly a country of emigration and that according to statistics of the Commission on Filipinos Overseas (CFO), 9,452,984 Filipinos were working and living overseas as of December 2010. Of those, 47 per cent are permanent residents in the country of destination, and 45 per cent are overseas Filipino workers who are expected to return at the end of their contract of employment. The remaining 8 per cent of the total estimated number of overseas Filipinos are in an irregular situation (i.e. undocumented, or without valid residence or work permits, or overstaying in a foreign country). The highest number of permanent overseas Filipinos is found in the Americas (3,481,263, mostly in the United States and Canada), while the highest number of temporary overseas Filipinos are found in West Asia (2,717,046, mostly in Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, Qatar, Kuwait and Bahrain) and in South and East Asia (644,446, mostly in China – Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, Japan, Malaysia, Taiwan and Singapore). The Committee further notes from the statistics collected by the Philippine Overseas Employment Administration (POEA) that of the 340,279 land-based overseas Filipinos deployed in 2010, 55 per cent were women, the majority of whom are employed in the services sectors. The Committee notes from the Government’s report to the United Nations Committee on Migrant Workers that according to the most recent data there are 36,150 foreign workers in the Philippines (CMW/C/PHP/1, 7 March 2008, paragraphs 36–45). The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the numbers of overseas Filipino workers (hires and re-hires) by economic sector, sex and country of destination. Please also provide up-to-date statistics, disaggregated by sex and nationality, as well as economic sector, on the number of migrants that have entered the Philippines for employment.

Laws, policies and structures promoting and protecting the rights of migrant workers. The Committee notes with interest the extensive legal and policy framework applying the Convention, illustrating the Government’s commitment to promoting and protecting the rights of Filipino migrant workers. It notes, in particular, Republic Act (RA) No. 8042 on Migrant Workers and Overseas Filipinos of 1995, as amended by RA No. 9422 to Strengthen the Regulatory Functions of the Philippine Overseas Employment Administration of 2006; RA No. 10022 Further Improving the Standard of Protection and Promotion of Welfare of Migrant Workers, Their Families and Overseas Filipinos in Distress and for Other Purposes, the Omnibus Rules and Regulations Implementing the Migrant Workers and Overseas Filipinos Act of 1995; RA No. 9208 on the “Anti-Trafficking Act” of 2002, the POEA’s Rules and Regulations Governing the Recruitment and Employment of Land-Based Overseas Workers, 2002, and the Overseas Workers’ Welfare Administration (OWWA) Omnibus Policies. The Committee also notes with interest the ratification by the Philippines of a number of international instruments relevant to migrant workers, in particular the United Nations Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and their Families (1990), the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143), and most recently, the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189).

Furthermore, the Committee notes with interest the multitude of programmes for overseas Filipino workers covering all stages of the migration process (from pre-departure, arrival in destination country and return), as well as the support structures for Filipino migrant workers, including the Commission on Filipinos Overseas (CFO), the National Reintegration Center for Overseas Foreign Workers (NRCO), OWWA, POEA, the Department of Labor and Employment (DOLE), the Technical Education and Skills Development Agency (TESDA), the Inter-Agency Council Against Trafficking (IACAT), the Department of Foreign Affairs (DFA) and the Philippine Overseas Labor Offices (POLOs), and labour attachés and consulates abroad addressing migrant workers' issues. The Committee notes in particular that the CFO is in charge of conducting a range of pre-departure programmes for Filipinos migrating permanently to other countries, including the pre-departure orientation seminars (PDOS), the Guidance and Counselling Programme for spouses and partners, the Peer Counselling Programme, and the Community Education Programme. It also notes the important role and functions of the POEA which is in charge of the recruitment and placement of overseas Filipino workers. The activities of the POEA include selection, referral to medical examination, processing of contracts, assistance and securing of passports and visas, pre-employment orientation seminars (PEOS) and anti-illegal recruitment seminars, PDOS and travel arrangements. PDOS are mandatory for all overseas Filipino workers going through the government-to-government arrangement and those who are directly employed by a foreign employer without the help of a recruitment agency ("name hires"). PEOS are offered in coordination with the local government units and aimed at providing prospective overseas workers with information on the realities of international labour migration including its challenges and risks. Gender-sensitive information and programmes and services are directed to prospective female migrants, including preparatory courses on conditions of work and life. The Committee further notes that Migrant Workers and Other Overseas Filipinos Resource Centers (MWRCs) are established in the premises of Philippine embassies in countries in which there are a large number of Filipino overseas workers. MWRCs provide a range of services, including counselling and legal services; welfare assistance, information, advice and programmes to promote social integration, including post-arrival orientation; registration of undocumented workers, training and skills upgrading, gender sensitive programmes and activities to assist with the particular needs of women migrant workers; orientation programmes for returning migrants, and monitoring of the situation with respect to migrant workers. The Legal Assistant for Migrant Workers in the DFA and the Legal Assistance Fund (RA 8042) have also been created with a view to ensuring that overseas Filipino workers have access to appropriate redress mechanisms while employed abroad. The National Re-integration Council for Overseas Foreign Workers (NRCO) delivers reintegration services to Filipino migrant workers using the full-cycle approach covering pre-departure, on-site and return phases of migration. Services include financial literacy orientation, counselling, and assistance with respect to local and overseas employment opportunities, skills training and upgrading and livelihood and business development. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the activities undertaken by the above institutions to give effect to the provisions of the Convention and to promote and protect the rights of Filipino migrant workers.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Slovenia

Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the observations by the Association of Free Trade Unions of Slovenia (AFTUS) annexed to the Government's report.

Article 6(1)(a)(i) of the Convention. Equality of treatment with respect to conditions of work. The Committee recalls that under the Employment and Work of Aliens Act (and subsequent amendments until Act 52/07), a foreigner with an employment permit could only take up employment with the employer to which the permit for employment was issued; a personal employment permit with three-year validity, which enables free access to the labour market, could be obtained by an alien with vocational education who was continuously employed for the last two years prior to the application at the same employer. The Committee had noted in this regard AFTUS's concern that allowing foreign workers with an employment permit to work only for the employer who obtained their work permit increased the employer's opportunity to exploit migrant workers with respect to working time, payment, rest periods and annual leave. The Committee had requested the Government to indicate how the concern of the dependency of migrant workers with an employment permit on one individual employer was addressed and to examine the conditions of work of migrant workers in those sectors in which they are primarily employed. The Committee notes the Government's indications that due to observance of increased dependency of migrant workers on individual employers, the Act on Employment and Work of Aliens was amended with a view to allowing greater flexibility to obtain a personal employment permit with three-year validity (giving free access to the labour market). The Committee notes that the amended Employment and Work of Aliens Act No. 26/2011 henceforth allows a foreign worker with vocational training or having acquired a national professional qualification in Slovenia who, in the past 24 months has been employed for at least 20 months, to apply for a personal employment permit (section 22(4)). Noting, however, that the law continues to provide that a foreigner with an employment permit can only take up employment with the employer to which the permit for employment was issued (section 10(4)), the Committee asks the Government to clarify how these amendments help reduce, in practice, the worker's dependency on an individual employer and the risk of non-respect of statutory provisions regarding conditions of work. Noting that the information provided on labour inspection services in 2009 covers violations of the Employment and Work of Aliens Law and the Law on the Prevention of Illegal Work and Employment Act, and not conditions of work, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the specific measures taken to ensure full application to migrant workers of the labour law provisions concerning remuneration, hours of work, overtime arrangements, rest periods and annual leave, as well as information on the number and nature of violations found particularly in sectors or occupations employing workers with an employment permit, and an indication of the sanctions imposed.

Article 6(1)(a)(iii). Equal treatment with respect to accommodation. The Committee previously noted concerns raised by AFTUS regarding substandard housing conditions of migrant workers and the need to strengthen supervision in this regard, to impose dissuasive penalties on potential violators and to establish minimum standards of living for migrant workers at the national level. The Committee notes with interest that pursuant to section 13(1) and (2) of the Employment and Work of Aliens

Law No. 26/2011 employers who employ foreigners and provide for their accommodation are obliged to meet minimum accommodation and hygiene standards, the terms of which will be set by ministerial regulations. The Committee notes that the rules on setting minimum standards for accommodation of aliens, who are employed or work in the Republic of Slovenia were published in the Official Gazette of the Republic of Slovenia No. 71/2011 and will enter into force as of January 2012. Supervision will be conducted by the labour inspectorate. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the activities of the labour inspectorate to enforce the rules on setting minimum standards for accommodation of aliens, including any violations detected and sanctions imposed, as well as any other measures taken to ensure that migrant workers are not treated less favourably with respect to accommodation.

Article 6(1)(b). Equal treatment with respect to social security. The Committee notes that AFTUS draws attention to section 5 (unemployment benefits) of the Agreement of Social Security between Slovenia and Bosnia and Herzegovina, the implementation of which prevents the majority of the workers from Bosnia and Herzegovina from exercising the right to unemployment benefits as such benefits are subject to permanent residence. The Committee understands that with a view to addressing this issue the Social Security Agreement has been amended, signed by both parties in 2010 and ratified by Slovenia. Noting that the amended Social Security Agreement will enter into force as soon as it is ratified by the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the Committee hopes that the provisions of the modified Agreement will ensure equality of treatment with respect to unemployment benefits in conformity with Article 6(1)(b) of the Convention, and asks the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the observations by the Association of Free Trade Unions of Slovenia (AFTUS) annexed to the Government's report.

Articles 10, 12(e) and 14(a). Free choice of employment. The Committee previously noted concerns expressed by AFTUS that under the work permit system established by the Employment and Work of Aliens Act (Acts Nos 66/00, 101/05 and 52/07) foreign workers issued with an employment permit did not have the free choice of employment until they met the conditions for obtaining a personal work permit. The Committee notes that the Employment and Work of Aliens Act was further amended in 2009 and 2011 (Acts 46/2009 and 26/2011) and that under the new legislation citizens from the European Union (EU), the European Economic Area (EEA) and Switzerland, as well as foreigners with a permanent residence permit have free access to the labour market. Third-country nationals with a "personal work permit" have free access to the labour market during the three-year validity period while a foreigner with an "employment permit", issued for a maximum of one year, continues to be tied to the employer to whom the permit is issued (section 10(2) and (3)). The employment permit can be renewed or reissued for a period not exceeding one year (section 25(1)). The Committee further notes that pursuant to section 22(3) a foreign worker with vocational training or who has acquired a national professional qualification in Slovenia who, in the past 24 months has been employed for at least 20 months, can apply for a personal employment permit (section 22(4)). The Government indicates in this regard that the foreigner who does not meet the condition of having at least vocational education may be integrated into the procedure of acquiring a national vocational qualification. Section 30(1) allows for some flexibility for foreigners with higher education for whom an employment permit or permit for work has been issued, to be employed by two or more employers. Recalling that Article 14(a) of the Convention allows the State to make the free choice of employment subject to temporary restrictions during a prescribed period not exceeding two years, and that Article 10 provides for the adoption of a national policy on equality of opportunity and treatment including with respect to access to vocational education, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to inform foreign workers with employment permits or permits for work of the possibility of acquiring a national vocational qualification, and provide information on the number of workers that have participated in such training. The Government is also requested to provide information on the number of migrant workers without vocational training or a national vocational qualification who are working under employment permits for a period exceeding two years.

National equality policy and integration of migrant workers in society. The Committee previously noted the need for systematic measures aimed at the integration of migrant workers and their families in society. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Decree on Aliens Integration No. 65/2008 provides for integration programmes intended for third-country nationals residing in Slovenia with a permanent residency permit and their family members, and for third-country nationals who have been residing in Slovenia on the basis of a temporary residence permit for at least two years and whose permit is valid for at least one year, and for their family members. The Committee also notes that a draft Decree amending and supplementing the Decree on Aliens Integration of 23 July 2010 would allow for inclusion in integration programmes of all third-country citizens residing in Slovenia on the basis of a residence permit issued for at least one year and third-country citizens who are family members of Slovenian citizens or EEA citizens residing in Slovenia on the basis of a residency permit, regardless of its duration. The Committee notes that the programmes cover Slovenian language courses and courses on Slovenian history, culture and constitutional arrangements, and that between November 2009 and the end of May 2010, 600 third-country nationals attended. The Government also indicates that programmes have included workshops going beyond intercultural differences and address reasons for and consequences of discrimination and xenophobia. The Committee notes the observations by AFTUS that an effective integration policy of migrants should be based on the earliest possible integration into suitable programmes of integration and social inclusion and that free participation into language programmes and learning about Slovenia culture, history and constitution should be provided to all foreigners, including those with a temporary residence permit for a period less than a year. The Committee further notes that an Alien Integration Council was created in 2008 with a view to a coordinated and effective implementation of the measures for integration of foreigners, but that according to AFTUS the Council does not fulfil its purpose. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the status of the adoption of the draft Decree amending and supplementing the Decree on Aliens Integration of 23 July 2010, and to indicate whether any consideration is being given to the concerns raised by AFTUS regarding the free participation of all foreigners, including those with a residency permit of less than a year in programmes of integration and social inclusion. Please also provide information on the activities of the Alien Integration Council.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

United Kingdom

Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97) (ratification: 1951)

The Committee notes the observations dated 29 August 2012, of the Trade Union Congress (TUC), which were prepared in collaboration with Anti-Slavery International and Kalayaan, to the extent that they cover matters which relate to the application of the Convention.

Article 6 of the Convention. Equality of treatment – foreign domestic workers. The Committee notes that in its communication, the TUC draws particular attention to the working conditions of foreign domestic workers, including the fact that living and working in their employers' homes makes them more vulnerable to abuse and non-respect of their rights. According to the TUC, the changes introduced on 6 April 2012 for overseas domestic workers, removing the fundamental safeguards of the Overseas Domestic Work Visa (ODW visa), including the right to change employer, are damaging to the protection of migrant domestic workers and increasing their vulnerability to abuse and unequal treatment. According to the TUC, the arrangement prior to 6 April 2012 under the ODW visa had been shown to work well and had been recognized internationally as an example of good practice. The TUC maintains that migrant workers, while theoretically enjoying equal treatment in respect of the matters set out in Article 6 of the Convention, are unable to access and enforce their employment rights in an effective manner in practice. According to the TUC, migrant domestic workers have no opportunity to pursue justice through the courts in the absence of the right to stay, and because of the absence of a residence permit allowing them to pursue compensation through the employment tribunals or civil courts. Referring to cases registered by Kalayaan, the TUC also draws attention to the heightened power imbalance between diplomatic domestic workers and their employers due to the status of the employer and the diplomatic immunity they are able to invoke, which makes domestic workers highly vulnerable to non-respect of employment rights and abuse, including payment below the national minimum wage, excessive working hours, psychological, physical and sexual abuse, withdrawal of passports and prohibition to leave the house unaccompanied. Further, the TUC challenges the effectiveness of certain protection measures put in place by the Government, namely requesting more evidence of an employee–employer relationship, requiring written terms and conditions of employment agreed to by the employer and the worker, and by providing translated information to domestic workers about their rights in the United Kingdom, as well as the possibility to contact the Pay and Work Rights Helpline for persons in need of employment advice.

The Committee notes that in 2008 the United Kingdom Border Agency (UKBA) introduced the Points-Based System (PBS) replacing over 80 previous economic migration “routes” with a 5-tier system. It also notes that on 6 April 2012 the Government introduced important changes regarding the employment of overseas domestic workers in the United Kingdom. The Committee notes that overseas domestic workers in diplomatic households are covered as “private servants in diplomatic households” under the PBS, Tier 5 (Temporary worker – international agreement) category. Migrant workers who applied for a visa in this capacity on or after 6 April 2012 can apply to extend their stay for a maximum of 12 months at a time, up to a total of five years or the length of their employer's posting, whichever is shorter. They cannot change employer during their stay but may sponsor dependants. Diplomatic domestic workers may only work in the household of the employer recorded on the certificate of sponsorship, and will not be able to apply for settlement in the United Kingdom. With regard to overseas domestic workers in private households – who are not included in the PBS – the Committee notes that under the new Immigration Rules (section 159A and 159B) these domestic workers will only be allowed entry into the United Kingdom to accompany their overseas employer on a visit to the United Kingdom for the time that the employer is in the country, or for six months, whichever is shorter. No extensions are allowed beyond this time. Overseas domestic workers may no longer change employer, sponsor dependants or apply for settlement in the United Kingdom from this route. For overseas domestic workers who have applied for an ODW visa before 6 April 2012, the former Immigration Rules continue to apply (sections 159EA and 159EB).

The Committee notes from the statistics published by the Home Office that for the year ending June 2012, there were 14,779 “out-of-country” visas and 4,384 “in-country” extensions of stay issued to overseas domestic workers in private households (making up, respectively, 14.1 per cent and 4.73 per cent of the total number of “out-of-country” visas and total “in-country” extensions issued); two “out-of-country” visas and five “in-country” extensions were issued to domestic workers in diplomatic households. Visas were also issued or extensions granted to dependants of these workers. The Committee requests the Government to reply to the observations made by the TUC and provide detailed information on the following:

- (i) The measures taken to enforce the application of the rights of overseas domestic workers regarding the matters set out in Article 6(1)(a)–(d) of the Convention including the relevant complaints procedures and mechanisms in place. Please also include information on the availability of and accessibility to legal aid and assistance for migrant workers. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which effective enforcement is being monitored, including information of any complaints received regarding non-respect of rights and their outcome for both the employer and the domestic worker.

- (ii) The specific procedure in place for both categories of overseas domestic workers who have left their employer because of abuse and who have filed a complaint with the competent authorities regarding unequal treatment with respect to any of the matters covered by Article 6 of the Convention, and any measures taken to reduce domestic workers' dependence on their employer as this is an important aspect of ensuring that equal treatment is applied to migrant workers in practice.
- (iii) The measures taken to ensure that the rights under the national legislation as well as the available complaints procedures and mechanisms for redress are made known and are understood by migrant domestic workers.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Uruguay

Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97) (ratification: 1954)

Article 1 of the Convention. Developments in national legislation, policies and agreements. The Committee notes with interest the promulgation of the Migration Act (No. 18250 of 6 January 2008) and its implementing regulations (Decrees Nos 394/2009, 330/2008, 357/2008 and 559/2008). The Government indicates that these provisions constitute a legislative framework with the aim of establishing a human rights policy for migration, regulating the admission, entry, residence and departure of persons to and from the national territory on the basis of the recognition of equal rights of migrants in relation to Uruguayan nationals regarding health, work and social security. The Act provides that the State shall promote the social and cultural integration of migrants within the national territory and their participation in public decision-making and also their inclusion in the education system (section 13) and shall provide monitoring for Uruguayan workers who have emigrated (Chapter V). Section 24 of the Act provides for the establishment of the National Migration Board as the advisory and coordinating body for migration policies formulated by the Executive Authority. Section 63 of Decree No. 394/2009 establishes the functions of this Board. Section 26 establishes the Advisory Council on Migration composed of the social and trade union organizations concerned with the subject of migration, whose function is to advise the National Migration Board on subjects relating to immigration and emigration, the formulation of migration policies and the monitoring of compliance with the applicable regulations in force. The Committee notes with interest the ratification on 14 June 2012 of the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189). The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation of the new Migration Act and its implementing regulations, particularly the operation of and the measures adopted by the National Migration Board. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any obstacles encountered in the implementation of the Act and the measures taken to overcome them.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143) (ratification: 1983)

Article 10 of the Convention. Equality of opportunity and treatment. The Committee has been referring for almost 20 years to the need to amend or repeal sections 27, 28, 30 and 317 of the Organic Labour Act. These provisions establish a 10 per cent limit on foreign workers in the workforce and the overall wages paid to such workers may not exceed 20 per cent of the total wage bill of the enterprise. The Committee notes the adoption on 30 April 2012 of the Organic Act concerning labour and male and female workers. The Committee notes with regret that despite the time that has elapsed and the numerous requests made, the Government has not taken the opportunity of the adoption of the Organic Act concerning labour and male and female workers to amend the provisions referred to above (now sections 27, 28, 29 and 231). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to amend or repeal sections 27, 28, 29 and 231 of the Organic Act concerning labour and male and female workers in order to align the legislation fully with the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment in employment for migrant workers and national workers.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

General observation

Getting ready for the entry into force of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006

On 20 August 2012, the 29th and 30th instruments of ratification of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), were registered by the Director-General of the International Labour Office. The Convention provides that it will come into force:

... 12 months after the date on which there have been registered ratifications by at least 30 Members with a total share in the world gross tonnage of ships of at least 33 per cent.

The registration of the 30th ratification combined with the 29 ratifications by Members with a total share of the world gross tonnage of ships of nearly 60 per cent means that the two conditions for the initial entry into force of the MLC, 2006, have now been met. Accordingly, the Convention will enter into force on 20 August 2013, for the following 30 Members (in order of ratification): Liberia, the Marshall Islands, the Bahamas, Panama, Norway, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Spain, Croatia, Bulgaria, Canada, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Switzerland, Benin, Singapore, Denmark, Antigua and Barbuda, Latvia, Luxembourg, Kiribati, the Netherlands, Australia, Tuvalu, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Togo, Poland, Palau, Sweden, Cyprus, the Russian Federation and the Philippines.

For Members that ratify after 20 August 2012 the Convention will enter in force 12 months after the date their ratifications are registered.

Unlike many other international labour Conventions, the MLC, 2006, was not accompanied by a non-binding international labour Recommendation, but rather has integrated binding and non-binding norms in a vertical structure of mandatory Articles, Regulations and Standards and non-mandatory Guidelines. The Convention requires ratifying Members to give “due consideration” to those Guidelines when implementing their obligations. Thus, reports submitted by Members under article 22 of the ILO Constitution will also cover this new element concerning the consideration that the Member has given to non mandatory Guidelines. The Convention also allows ratifying Members that are not in a position to fully implement the provisions of a mandatory Standard (other than the Standards related to compliance and enforcement) to adopt provisions in their laws and regulations or other measures which are “substantially equivalent” to the provisions of that Standard.

These are the main examples of the principle of “firmness and flexibility” that underlies the MLC, 2006: firmness on rights and principles with considerable flexibility for each ratifying Member to determine the ways in which those rights and principles will be implemented in their details. They present a challenging opportunity for the supervisory system of the International Labour Organization to adopt a broad teleological approach in determining whether or not a ratifying Member is giving proper effect in law and in practice to the comprehensive requirements of the MLC, 2006. This is an approach which the Committee has sought to adopt with respect to its review of the implementation of other Conventions, but which is greatly facilitated by the text of the MLC, 2006.

The work of the Committee should also be facilitated by the system of enforcement and compliance established by the Convention, which provides a role to all the various actors at the national level: to flag States for inspection and certification, complemented by port State control, to shipowners for devising proper procedures for ongoing compliance and ensuring implementation on their ships, to seafarers and seafarers’ organizations for drawing attention to particular cases of non-compliance, and to the States of residence for supervising the activities of recruitment and placement services established on their territory.

In addition, the MLC, 2006, gives these same actors a role at the international level, in the framework of the special tripartite committee, that is to be established by the Governing Body, which is to keep the working of the Convention under continuous review and which, in particular, will have power to amend the details set out in the Code of the Convention, subject to approval by the International Labour Conference. This collective role should enable an interesting collaboration between these maritime actors and the Committee of Experts through the sharing of information and the adoption of complementary action.

The Committee recalls the two major innovations introduced by the MLC, 2006: (i) a certification system for ships engaged in international voyages; and (ii) a no more favourable treatment clause for ships flying the flag of non ratifying countries. Vessels flying the flag of ratifying countries will carry maritime labour certificates offering prima facie evidence of compliance and hence should not, in principle, experience delays due to lengthy port State control inspections. In contrast, vessels flying the flag of non-ratifying countries cannot be issued certificates of compliance and would thus be exposed to full-fledged inspection for compliance with the MLC, 2006, when visiting foreign ports. It is therefore in the highest interest of all member States who may not have yet done so to ratify the Convention the soonest possible so that ships flying their flag – and by extension their maritime sector and national economies – can draw the full benefits of the new regime. By moving rapidly towards ratification of the MLC, 2006, they also help to shorten the transition period during which they will continue to be bound by existing maritime Conventions that they may have previously ratified but may not cover the full range of areas covered by the MLC, 2006, that are subject to port State control inspection.

The Committee also understands that many countries are in the process of revising their maritime legislation for the purpose of implementing the provisions of the MLC, 2006. In this connection, and bearing in mind that the MLC, 2006, does not apply to the fishing sector, the Committee considers it important to draw attention to the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188), and strongly encourages the governments concerned to consider the possibility of regulating the working and living conditions of fishers as part of the same revision exercise, as may be appropriate, with a view to avoiding the duplication of a lengthy and complex legislative process.

The Committee of Experts takes very seriously the new approach called for by the MLC, 2006, bearing in mind that the success of a flexible approach that does not prejudice the effectiveness of international labour standards in their essence, could encourage the adoption of Conventions providing for a similar approach in other areas covered by the ILO's mandate.

Barbados

Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention, 1958 (No. 108) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 2 of the Convention. Seafarers' identity documents. Since 1999, the Committee has been commenting on the Government's failure to apply the Convention and has been requesting it to: (i) reinstate the identity document for seafarers who are Barbadian nationals; (ii) enact new regulations or amend existing ones so that foreign seafarers may enter Barbados with a valid identity document issued pursuant to this Convention; and (iii) provide copies of the relevant legislative and/or regulatory texts ensuring the application of the Convention. In its latest report, the Government indicates that there are no active seafarers employed, no seafarer or shipowner representative organizations and no formal employment agencies. The Government adds that it has not denounced the Convention and that identity documents would be issued in the future if there is demand for them. While noting the explanations regarding the current situation with respect to Barbadian seafarers, the Committee also notes that the Government has not given any indication as to whether foreign seafarers holding identity documents issued pursuant to the Convention are accorded the facilities provided for in that instrument. Under the circumstances, the Committee concludes that the basic requirements of the Convention are still not implemented in either law or practice. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that its obligations under the Convention are fully respected and to inform the Office of all measures taken in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Costa Rica

Prevention of Accidents (Seafarers) Convention, 1970 (No. 134) (ratification: 1979)

Article 2 of the Convention. Statistics and investigations of occupational accidents. The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government on the number of accidents that occurred in the fisheries sector between 2006 and 2011. It points out, however, that in its previous observation it drew the Government's attention to the fact that according to the Convention, statistics of occupational accidents on board ships must cover not only their number, but also their nature, causes and effects. They must also specify the department on board ship – for example, deck, engine or catering – and the area – for instance at sea or in port – where the accident occurred. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide detailed statistics in its next report containing all the above data on occupational accidents occurring on board vessels.

With regard to investigations, the Committee notes that the Government refers to section 214 of the Labour Code, which requires employers to send to the National Insurance Institute (INS) all relevant information about the occupational risks that employees are exposed to, and to cooperate in INS investigations. It points out, however, that according to Article 2(4) of the Convention, in the event of an occupational accident resulting in loss of life or serious personal injury, the competent authority itself shall undertake an investigation into the causes and circumstances of the accident. The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures in the very near future to introduce this obligation in the legislation, and requests it to keep the Office informed of any decisions taken to this end, describing the procedures that apply in investigations required under this provision of the Convention.

Article 3. Research. In the absence of a reply to its previous comments on this point, the Committee again asks the Government to provide information on any research carried out on general trends in occupational accidents on board ship and such hazards as are brought out by statistics.

Articles 4 and 5. Provisions on the prevention of occupational accidents. The Committee again requests the Government to indicate whether the regulations implementing section 162 of Act No. 8436 of 10 February 2005 on fisheries and aquaculture, which specify the measures needed to ensure the occupational safety and health of crew members, have been adopted and, if so, to provide a copy. It also reiterates its request for information on the procedure for certifying observance of national and international safety standards which is provided for in section 198bis of the Labour Code and is a requirement for the delivery or renewal of fishing licenses.

Article 7. Occupational safety and health committees. In the absence of a reply to its previous comments on this point, the Committee again requests the Government to indicate whether the obligation to set up occupational safety and health committees in work centres employing ten or more workers, established by Decree No. 18379-TSS of 19 July 1988, applies to ships. In addition, the Committee recalls that this Article of the Convention requires the appointment, from amongst the crew of the ship, of a suitable person or suitable persons, or of a suitable committee, responsible under the master for accident prevention, but does not restrict the coverage of the provision to vessels having at least ten seafarers on board. It accordingly asks the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that this provision is applied to all ships covered by the Convention.

Article 8. Programmes for the prevention of occupational accidents. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes the information supplied by the Government to the effect that consultations on the occupational accident prevention programmes were held with the competent institutions but that the information requested has not as yet been collected. It requests the Government in its next report to send such information as is available on the establishment and implementation of these programmes in the maritime sector.

Lastly, the Committee recalls that the main provisions of the Convention have been incorporated in Regulation 4.3, Standard A4.3 and Guideline B4.3 of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006) and that compliance with Convention No. 134 will therefore facilitate observance of the corresponding provisions of the MLC, 2006. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would keep the Office informed of any developments regarding the process for the ratification and effective implementation of the MLC, 2006.

Guinea

Prevention of Accidents (Seafarers) Convention, 1970 (No. 134) (ratification: 1977)

Article 2 of the Convention. Prevention of occupational accidents for seafarers. The Committee recalls its previous comments in which it asked the Government to take all the necessary steps to ensure that full effect is given to the provisions of the Convention. The Government indicates in its last report that, with the return to constitutional order and the resumption of the activities of the Labour and Social Legislation Advisory Committee, steps will be taken to prepare laws and regulations which will give effect to the Convention. The Committee understands that the Labour and Social Legislation Advisory Committee was revived under the provisions of section 96 of Presidential Decree No. D/2008/040/PRG/SGG of 28 July 2008 establishing the competencies and structure of ministerial departments, general secretariats and the Prime Minister's Office. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will make every effort to ensure that the legislative texts giving effect to the Convention will be adopted in the very near future. It requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any progress made in this field and to send a copy of these texts once they have been adopted.

Finally, the Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to ratify the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), which revises Convention No. 134 and 36 other international maritime labour Conventions and whose Regulation 4.3 and corresponding Code contain detailed provisions on maritime occupational safety and health and accident prevention. The Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of any decisions taken on this matter.

Lebanon

Seafarers' Pensions Convention, 1946 (No. 71) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 2 to 4 of the Convention. Pension scheme for seafarers. The Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to adopt legislation implementing the requirements of the Convention. More concretely, the Committee has requested the Government to take the necessary measures in order to introduce into either the Merchant Shipping Code or the Social Security Act provisions establishing a pension scheme for seafarers on retirement from sea service. The Government's earlier indications were that it was in the process of preparing draft texts regulating the seafarers' pension scheme, in consultation with the Association of Lebanese Shipowners and the Federation of Maritime Transport Unions. However, in its last report, received in November 2010, the Government states that nothing has been done with regard to the implementation of the Convention or the adoption of executive decrees and measures concerning Lebanese workers employed on board Lebanese-registered vessels. Noting therefore that the Convention in its entirety is still not applied in practice, and that no progress has been made for more than 15 years, the Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the very near future.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Peru

Seafarers' Pensions Convention, 1946 (No. 71) (ratification: 1962)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the tripartite committee (representation made under article 24 of the Constitution of the ILO). The Committee notes that at its 313th Session (March 2012), the Governing Body adopted the report of the committee set up to examine a representation alleging non-observance by Peru of Convention No. 71, made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution by the Autonomous Workers' Confederation of Peru (CATP) (GB.313/INS/12/4). The Committee recalls that in its conclusions the Governing Body asked the Government: (1) to take the necessary measures to ensure that the contributions of fishers are effectively equivalent to no more than half of the cost of the pensions payable under the scheme, in any circumstances, in accordance with Article 3(2) of the Convention; (2) to proceed to the payment of the benefits owed that are still awaiting payment by the Fishers' Benefits and Social Security Fund (CBSSP) as soon as possible; (3) to continue, once the process of the dissolution and liquidation of the CBSSP has been completed, to secure the maintenance of a scheme for the payment of pensions that is in compliance with the requirements of the Convention both in terms of the collective financing and the guaranteed rate of pension benefits; (4) to ensure that full effect is given to the ruling of the Transitional Civil Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice of 24 November 2009, ordering payment of the amounts owed to the CBSSP; (5) to take all necessary measures to ensure that the rate of the pensions paid to any of the former employees of the Peruvian Steamship Company (CPV) who were seafarers and have completed a prescribed period of sea service is in all cases at least equal to the rate resulting from the application of the minimum replacement rate determined by Article 3(1)(a) of the Convention, if necessary by revising the ceiling applicable to such pensions. The Governing Body furthermore invited the Government to provide, in a report to be submitted to the present session of the Committee of Experts, detailed information on measures adopted to give effect to its recommendations.

The Committee notes the information sent by the Government on the measures taken to enable the pensions due from the CBSSP to be paid. It notes that according to the applicable legislation, obligations towards CBSSP beneficiaries, including retirement pension obligations, rank second in the order of priority of payments due from the CBSSP, coming after obligations towards employees and former employees of the Fund. To enable the various debts to be settled, the CBSSP, in the process of liquidation, is drawing up a list of its creditors, it being understood that it may settle a lower ranking claim before a claim of higher rank only if it deposits the necessary resources in a financial institution. Furthermore, the CBSSP is still in operation and receives income in the form of social contributions. An inventory has been made of the Fund's assets and some of them are in the process of being realized. Lastly, the CBSSP's claims vis-à-vis the Peruvian State amount to some US$10 million, without interest. As to the implementation of the decision handed down by the Supreme Court of Justice on 24 November 2009, the Government refers to transfers that have already been made to the CBSSP. However, the last transfer mentioned was made under Act No. 29529 of 8 May 2010. It would thus appear that there have been no further transfers for over two years. As regards the former employees of the CPV, the Government confirms that retirement pensions are subject to a ceiling of 857.36 new soles (approximately US$330), but provides no information as to the amount of the pensions actually paid to CPV former employees, and therefore the Committee is unable to ascertain whether the provisions of Article 3(1)(a) of the Convention are observed. Furthermore, the Government provides no information on the fishers' contributions to their retirement pension scheme or on measures taken to ensure that the contributions of fishers amount to no more than half of the cost of the pensions. Lastly, the Government provides no information on measures taken to ensure, following the dissolution of the CBSSP and pending the possible transfer of its members to the general (public or private) pension scheme, the maintenance of a pension scheme that is in compliance with the requirements of the Convention.

The Committee also notes the observations made by the CATP in a communication of 31 August 2012, in which the organization alleges that so far the Government has not implemented any of the Governing Body's recommendations.

The Committee asks the Government to send detailed information on the measures taken to implement the Governing Body's recommendations and to respond to the other points raised in the observation of 2011.

[The Government is asked to reply in detail to the present comments in 2013.]

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following State in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 108 (United Kingdom: St Helena).

Fishers

Brazil

Fishermen's Competency Certificates Convention, 1966 (No. 125) (ratification: 1970)

Article 5(2) of the Convention. Obligation to carry a certificated mate. The Committee notes the requirements established by NORMAM-01/DPC concerning minimum safe manning levels on vessels. It notes that the presence of a certificated mate is required on board long-haul vessels and also coastal vessels or other vessels whose gross tonnage exceeds 500 tons. However, the Committee recalls that the Convention requires that all fishing vessels over 100 gross registered tons engaged in operations and areas to be defined by national laws or regulations shall be required to carry a certificated mate. The Committee hopes that the Government will take steps in the very near future to ensure the implementation of this provision of the Convention and requests it to keep the Office informed of any decision taken on this matter.

Articles 7 and 9. Minimum experience required – Mates' and engineers' certificates. The Committee notes that Annex 2-A to NORMAM-13 defines the requirements for working as a mate (imediato) on fishing vessels engaged in inland navigation but does not contain any details of the requirements in terms of professional experience for the exercise of these duties on fishing vessels engaged in high seas operations. It requests the Government to provide further information on the rules that are applicable in this sphere.

As regards engineers' certificates, the Committee notes that Annex 2-A to NORMAM-13 establishes a distinction between the following categories: chief engineer on a fishing vessel with engine power below 150 kilowatts and sailing up to 20 miles from the coast; chief engineer on a fishing vessel with engine power below 250 kilowatts and engaged in high seas navigation; chief engineer on a fishing vessel with engine power below 500 kilowatts and engaged in high seas navigation; and chief engineer on a fishing vessel with engine power below 1,000 kilowatts and engaged in high seas navigation. It notes that minimum professional experience as ship's engineer is only required for these last two categories and that this minimum is fixed at two years whereas the Convention requires a minimum of three years' sea service in the engine room. The Committee hopes that the Government will take steps in the near future to bring the national legislation into line with the provisions of Article 9 of the Convention and requests it to keep the Office informed of any new developments in this regard.

Liberia

Medical Examination (Fishermen) Convention, 1959 (No. 113) (ratification: 1960)

Article 3 of the Convention. Nature of medical examination and particulars to be included in the medical certificate. For the last 16 years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to clarify whether certain provisions of the Requirements for Merchant Marine Personnel (RLM-118), as well as Maritime Regulation 10.325(3), regarding medical certification of seafarers apply also to fishers. In its last report, the Government merely indicates that the legal texts in question apply to fishing vessels of 500 gross tons or more. The Committee observes, in this respect, that the Convention applies to all fishing vessels irrespective of tonnage and therefore requests the Government to take all appropriate measures to ensure that fishers employed on board fishing vessels of less than 500 gross tons are subject to the same medical certification requirements in accordance with the provisions of the Convention.

In addition, the Committee notes that the Government has issued Marine Notice MLC-002, which implements the medical certification requirements of Standard A1.2 of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), providing, in particular, that the maximum period of validity of medical certificates should not exceed two years for seafarers above 18 years of age and one year for those under the age of 18. The Committee recalls that similar provisions are found in Article 12 of the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188), which revises and updates most ILO instruments on fishing, including Convention No. 113. Noting the Government's indication included in its 2010 report on the Merchant Shipping (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 147), that it is planning to amend its Maritime Law (RLM-107) and Regulations (RLM-108), the Committee asks the Government to take prompt action in order to align its legislation with the requirements of Convention No. 188 regarding medical certification of fishers.

Fishermen's Articles of Agreement Convention, 1959 (No. 114) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 3 to 9 of the Convention. Fishers' articles of agreement. Noting that for the last 30 years the Government has been referring to the forthcoming adoption of new legislation giving effect to the provisions of the Convention, the Committee once more asks the Government to indicate any measures taken to ensure the application of the Convention both in law and in practice. The Government is also asked to specify whether the Liberian Maritime Law (RLM-107), the Liberian Maritime Regulations (RLM-108), and the Marine Notice SEA-002 (Rev.05/12), also apply to fishing vessels.

Russian Federation

Accommodation of Crews (Fishermen) Convention, 1966 (No. 126) (ratification: 1969)

Article 3 of the Convention. Laws and regulations implementing the provisions of Parts II, III and IV of the Convention. The Committee notes that no substantive progress has been made with respect to the specific points on which the Committee has been commenting since 2005. In its latest report, the Government reiterates that draft legislation is being prepared to replace the 1977 Regulations issuing sanitary rules for Soviet vessels and boats and that the new legislation will be in line with the provisions of the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188).

The Committee recalls that it has been drawing the Government's attention to two sets of provisions. Firstly, there are provisions that are currently not given effect by national laws and regulations, such as: the provisions with respect to penalties for non-compliance (Article 3(2)(d)); periodical inspection (Article 5); watertight and gastight bulkheads (Article 6(3)); prohibition of open fires (Article 8(3)); sleeping room capacity (Article 10(9)); sanitary facilities (Article 12(2)(c)); facilities for drying clothes (Article 12(7), (11)); sickbay (Article 13(1)); and alterations to existing vessels (Article 17(2)-(4)). Secondly, there are provisions on which the Committee has requested, but never received information, and therefore, their application in practice remains unclear, for instance: the provisions relating to emergency escapes from crew accommodation, adequate insulation of sleeping rooms and mess rooms, fire prevention/retarding measures, steam and exhaust pipes not through crew accommodation, wall surfaces in sleeping rooms painted in a light colour and kept easily clean (Article 6(2), (4), (7), (9)-(11), (13), (14)); heating in operation at all times when practicable (Article 8(2)); permanent blue light in sleeping rooms (Article 9(5)); sleeping rooms amidships or aft, separate room for each department, construction and size of berths, furniture of sleeping rooms (Article 10(1), (5), (13)-(26)); furniture and equipment of mess rooms (Article 11(7), (8)); and gas used for cooking (Article 16(6)).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every possible effort to finalize in the very near future the draft "Requirements for the safety of floating craft and water transport vessels to ensure hygiene and disease control", taking into account all the comments that the Committee has been formulating for a number of years.

Sierra Leone

Fishermen's Competency Certificates Convention, 1966 (No. 125) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Articles 3 to 15 of the Convention. Certificates of competency. The Committee has been commenting for a number of years on the absence of laws and regulations giving effect to the Convention. The Government stated in its report communicated in 2004 that progress was being made in this respect and that a national workshop on the formulation of fishing policies was organized. The Government also indicated that copies of the new legislation and the texts defining the new policies would be communicated to the ILO as soon as they were adopted. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on the outcome of the national workshop on the formulation of fishing policies and on any concrete progress made in respect of the adoption of national laws implementing the Convention. The Committee understands that the Office remains ready to offer expert advice and to respond favourably to any specific request for technical assistance in this regard. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to supply up-to-date information concerning the fishing industry, including statistics on the composition and capacity of the country's fishing fleet and the approximate number of fishers gainfully employed in the sector.

The Committee also draws the Government's attention to the new Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188), which revises and updates most ILO instruments on fishing. The Committee requests the Government to give all due attention to this new comprehensive instrument on the working and living conditions of fishers and to keep the Office informed of any decision that it may take with a view to its eventual ratification.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Spain

Fishermen's Articles of Agreement Convention, 1959 (No. 114) (ratification: 1961)

Articles 3 to 11 of the Convention. Fishermen's articles of agreement. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's confirmation that the employment relationships of fishers are regulated by the Workers' Statute, and that no other legal provisions apply to them. Regarding the requirement that articles of agreement are to be concluded in writing, pursuant to Article 3 of the Convention, the Government indicates that section 8 of the Workers' Statute lists the cases in which the employment contract must be established in writing. These include apprenticeship contracts, part-time contracts and certain fixed-term contracts. Articles of agreement for maritime fishing, however, are not included in this list. The Government also refers to Royal Decree No. 1424/2002 of 27 December 2002 which regulates communication to the public employment services of the content of employment contracts and copies thereof, as well as the use of telematics to this end. However, the Committee notes that the Royal Decree provides only for the communication of the content of employment contracts, without requiring that they be concluded in writing in all circumstances. Section 1 of the Decree, in fact, provides that the obligation for employers to communicate the content of employment contracts concluded by them applies "whether or not these must be formalized in writing". The Government also mentions Royal Decree No. 1659/1998 of 24 July 1998 to apply section 8(5) of the Workers' Statute which deals with information for workers on the main elements of the employment contract. The Committee notes that, while communication of this information is certainly useful and contributes to the protection of the workers, the provisions of this Royal Decree and of section 8(5) of the Workers' Statute do not give effect to the provisions of the Convention regarding the formalities for concluding fishers' articles of agreement and the particulars they must contain. Nor are the legal requirements relating to the crew list and book service, to which the Government also refers, any more likely to ensure implementation of the Convention.

Consequently, the Committee can only note with concern that the current legislation does not ensure application of the main provisions of the Convention that address, in particular, the obligation to conclude fishers' articles of agreement in writing and the particulars they are bound to contain. It urges the Government rapidly to take the necessary measures to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention, the requirements of which are to a large extent reproduced in the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188), which is the consolidated and up-to-date instrument in this area.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 112 (Liberia, Mauritania, Peru); Convention No. 113 (Brazil, Bulgaria, Guinea, Kyrgyzstan, Peru, Tajikistan); Convention No. 114 (France, Mauritania, Slovenia); Convention No. 125 (Belgium, France, France: French Polynesia, France: New Caledonia, Germany, Panama, Senegal, Syrian Arab Republic); Convention No. 126 (Azerbaijan, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, France, France: French Polynesia, France: New Caledonia, Greece, Kyrgyzstan, Panama, Sierra Leone, Spain, Ukraine).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following States in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 113 (Croatia, France); Convention No. 114 (Guinea); Convention No. 126 (Denmark).

Dockworkers

Algeria

Protection against Accidents (Dockers) Convention (Revised), 1932 (No. 32) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation, which read as follows:

Articles 12, 13 and 15 of the Convention. Application of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government reports do not contain any reply to the Committee's comments despite its repeated requests over a number of years and that the Government still does not appear to have taken the necessary steps to adopt the legislative text concerning ports and dockers pursuant to Act No. 88-07 as planned. However, the Committee notes the Government's efforts to improve the situation relating to occupational safety and health by ratifying the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155). It notes that this Convention applies to all branches of economic activity, including dock enterprises and dockworkers, and that it therefore constitutes a general context for the application of Convention No. 32. However, the Government continues to be bound by its obligation to adopt specific legislative provisions giving full effect to the provisions of Convention No. 32. The Committee requests the Government once again to take the necessary steps in the very near future to give full effect, in law and in practice, to the provisions of the present Convention, particularly Articles 12, 13 and 15, and to send copies of all relevant legislative texts once they have been adopted.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. Article 17(2). Labour inspection. The Committee notes the lack of information concerning the application in practice of the Convention. With specific reference to the provisions of Article 17(2) of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to send its general observations on the manner in which the Convention is applied, including, for example, extracts of the reports of the inspection services, up-to-date statistical information on the number of inspection visits carried out, the number of infringements reported and also the number, nature and causes of accidents recorded, etc.

The Committee takes this opportunity to remind the Government that the ILO Governing Body invited the States parties to Convention No. 32 to envisage ratifying the Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152), which revises Convention No. 32 (GB.268/LILS/5(Rev.1), paragraphs 99–101). Ratification of Convention No. 152 would entail ipso jure the immediate denunciation of Convention No. 32. The Committee would also like to draw the Government's attention to the code of practice recently adopted by the ILO entitled Safety and health in ports (Geneva, 2005), which is available, inter alia, on the ILO website: www.ilo.org/public/english/protection/safework/cops/english/index.htm. The Government is requested to keep the Office informed of all progress made in this field.

The Committee wishes to invite the Government to request ILO assistance with the view to the effective application of the Convention. The Committee hopes that such technical assistance can be carried out and asks the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this respect with the relevant ILO bodies.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Argentina

Protection against Accidents (Dockers) Convention (Revised), 1932 (No. 32) (ratification: 1950)

The Committee notes the Government's indication that, since there are no new provisions relating to the subject in question, reference should be made to information contained in previous reports. The Committee notes that the Government has not supplied the information requested in its previous observation. The Committee is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments on the application of the Convention, which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report. It also notes that the provisions of Article 8 of the Convention, Safety measures regarding hatch coverings and beams used for hatch coverings; Article 13, paragraph 2, Rescue measures in the event of workers falling into the water; Article 14, Prohibition against removing or interfering with fencing, gangways, gear, ladders, etc.; and Article 18, Reciprocal arrangements, are still not covered by specific regulations as required by the Convention. The Committee hopes that the Government will adopt the necessary measures in the near future.

Congo

Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152) (ratification: 1986)

The Committee notes with regret that the report submitted by the Government is identical to the most recent report submitted by the Government in 2007 which formed the basis for the Committee's observation in 2008 repeated in 2009, 2010 and 2011 for lack of a response from the Government. The Committee urges the Government to solicit technical assistance of the ILO to resolve any problems related to the application of this Convention, and hopes that a report will be supplied for examination by the Committee at its next session. In the meantime and in the absence of any new information, the Committee must, yet again, repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government according to which a national advisory technical committee on occupational safety and health has been set up pursuant to Decree No. 2000-29 of 17 March 2000 which gives effect to Article 7 of the Convention. It also notes, however, that the information requested concerning Articles 2, 4, 5, 6 and 11-36 are to be provided by the Government subsequently. As regards the further information the Committee has requested the Government to provide, the Committee notes that the Government has either not replied to questions raised by the Committee in its previous comments or it has provided information that is applicable to enterprises in general. The Government appears to imply that dockworkers should be treated in the same manner as other workers and ports be treated like any other enterprise. With reference to Articles 4–7, the Committee wishes to recall that the Government is required to take measures to give effect to the specific provisions in the Convention. The Committee must therefore once again repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee draws the Government's attention to the absence of specific health and safety provisions for dock work. The Committee noted previously that a draft Order on safety and health in dock work had been prepared by the technical departments of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. In its report for the period ending 30 June 1993, the Government repeated this information and added that the draft had been submitted for adoption. The Committee hopes that the provisions of this text will ensure the application of the following provisions of the Convention: Article 4 (objectives and areas to be covered by measures to be established by national laws and regulations, in accordance with Part III of the Convention); Article 5 (responsibility of employers, owners, masters or other persons as appropriate, for compliance with safety and health measures; duty of employers to collaborate whenever two or more of them undertake activities simultaneously at one workplace); Article 7 (consultation of and collaboration between employers and workers). It asks the Government to provide a copy of the above Order as soon as it has been adopted.

In its previous reports, the Government referred to Orders No. 9033/MTERFPPS/DGT/DSSHT on the organization and functioning of the socio-medical centres of enterprises in the People's Republic of the Congo and No. 9034/MTERFPPS/DGT/DSSHT laying down the procedures for the establishment of socio-medical centres which are common to several enterprises in the People's Republic of the Congo. Since these texts have not been received, the Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide a copy of them.

Article 6. The Committee notes from the Government's report for the period ending 30 June 1993 that briefings are to be organized to inform workers about safety provisions in the place of work at which heads of establishment can alert them about the dangers arising from the use of machinery and the precautions to be taken. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the provisions concerning the organization of these briefings and the measures taken to give effect to paragraph 1(c) of this Article.

Article 8. The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report for the period ending 30 June 1993 that all safety measures are provided for in Chapter II of Order No. 9036 of 10 December 1986. The Committee notes that the above part of the Order provides for general protective measures whereas the Convention requires the adoption of measures specific to dock work. It asks the Government to indicate which provisions require the adoption of effective measures (fencing, flagging or other suitable means including, when necessary, cessation of work) to ensure that when the workplace has become unsafe, workers are protected until it has been made safe again.

Article 14. The Committee notes from the Government's report for the period ending 30 June 1993 that the application of this Article is ensured by labour inspectors by means of inspections in enterprises. The Committee asks the Government to indicate which provisions ensure that electrical equipment and installations are so constructed, installed, operated and maintained as to prevent danger, and which standards for electrical equipment and installations have been recognized by the competent authorities.

Article 17. The Committee notes that section 41 of Order No. 9036, cited by the Government in its report for the period ending 30 June 1993 as giving effect to this Article of the Convention, includes specific measures only for the use of lifting gear in particular weather conditions (wind). The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that the means of access to a ship's hold or cargo deck are in conformity with the provisions of this Article.

Article 21. The Committee notes the provisions of sections 47–49 of Order No. 9036 which the Government cites in its report for the period ending 30 June 1993 as giving effect to this Article of the Convention. It notes that the above sections provide for protective measures for some machinery or parts of machines which can be dangerous. It asks the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that all lifting appliances, every item of loose gear and every sling or lifting device forming an integral part of a load comply with the provisions of the Convention.

Articles 22, 23, 24 and 25. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, in its report for the period ending 30 June 1993, the Government refers to the certification of machinery, including lifting appliances, which is conducted by technical inspectors and advisory bodies, as a general measure to ensure that lifting appliances are sound and in proper working order. However, these Articles of the Convention provide for a set of measures to ensure that appliances and loose gear can be used by workers without any danger or risk: testing of all lifting appliances and loose gear (every five years in ships); thorough examination (at least once every 12 months); regular inspection before use. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the provisions requiring the above measures to be taken in respect of all lifting appliances – on shore and on board – and of all loose gear.

Article 30. The Committee notes that section 43 of Order No. 9036 referred to by the Government, does not relate to the attaching of loads to lifting appliances. It asks the Government to indicate which provisions relate to this matter.

Article 34. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the instructions concerning the wearing of personal protective equipment referred to by the Government in its report for the period ending 30 June 1993.

Article 35. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that section 147 of the Labour Code regulates the evacuation of injured persons who are able to be moved and who are not able to be treated by the facilities made available by the employer. It notes that the Government also refers in its reports to Orders Nos 9033 and 9034 mentioned in paragraph 2 above. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken either under the above texts, or otherwise, to ensure that adequate facilities, including trained personnel, are available for the provision of first aid.

Article 37(1). The Committee recalls that, under this provision of the Convention, committees which include employers' and workers' representatives must be formed at every port where there is a significant number of workers. Recalling the Government's statement that the health and safety committees provided for by the law have not been formed, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure the establishment of such committees in ports with a significant number of workers.

Article 38(1). The Government indicates in its report that, in the absence of health and safety committees, instruction and training are entrusted to a specialist in the matter within the enterprise. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the activities of these specialists.

Article 39. The Committee notes that section 61 of Act No. 004/86 of 25 February 1986 establishing the Social Security Code gives effect in part to this Article of the Convention. It asks the Government to indicate the provisions which ensure that this Article is applied to occupational diseases.

Article 41(1)(a). Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government refers to Order No. 9036 of 10 December 1986 as being the text which lays down general obligations for the persons and bodies concerned with dock work (ports being treated as any industrial enterprise) and that no specific measures have been taken in respect of dock work. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to set out the specific obligations taken for the persons and bodies concerned with dock work.

In the absence of any information on the application of the above provisions, the Committee asks the Government to indicate the specific measures which give effect to the following provisions of the Convention:

- Article 9(1) and (2). Safety measures with regard to lighting and marking of dangerous obstacles.
- Article 10(1) and (2). Maintenance of surfaces for traffic or stacking of goods and safe manner of stacking goods.
- Article 11(1) and (2). Width of passageways and separate passageways for pedestrians.
- Article 16(1) and (2). Safe transport to or from a ship or other place by water, safe embarking and disembarking, and safe transport to or from a workplace on land.
- Article 18(1)–(5). Regulations concerning hatch covers.
- Article 19(1) and (2). Protection around openings and decks, closing of hatchways when not in use.
- Article 20(1)–(4). Safety measures when power vehicles operate in the hold; hatch covers secured against displacement; ventilation regulations; safe means of escape from bins or hoppers when dry bulk is being loaded or unloaded.
- Article 26(1)–(3). Members' mutual recognition of arrangements for testing and examination.
- Article 27(1)–(3). Marking lifting appliances with safe working loads.
- Article 28. Rigging plans.
- Article 29. Strength and construction of pallets for supporting loads.
- Article 31(1) and (2). Operation and layout of freight container terminals and organization of work in such terminals.
- Article 38(2). Minimum age limit for workers operating lifting appliances.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Costa Rica

Dock Work Convention, 1973 (No. 137) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes with interest the information sent by the Government in July 2010 and September 2012 in relation to the observation made in 2009. The Government provides information sent by the Costa Rican Pacific Ports Institute (INCOP) and the Committee for Port Administration and Economic Development of the Atlantic Coast (JAPDEVA).

Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Convention. Permanent or regular employment. Registers for all occupational categories of dockworkers. The Committee notes that INCOP receives reports from private enterprises licensed to operate in the Pacific ports containing lists and supporting documents from the three licensed enterprises specifying the workers who are assigned to port operations. In addition, two other enterprises maintain contracts with various cooperatives or cargo handling enterprises which hire some 900 workers, 70 per cent of whom are workers who were dismissed by INCOP as part of a privatization process which took place in 2006. The three enterprises holding the concessions have indicated that all their staff are employed on a fixed basis and so they do not have a list of registered workers. On the Atlantic Coast, 20 different categories of dockworkers have been identified who have obtained employment stability through being classified as civil service employees.

Article 5. Cooperation with the social partners. The Committee notes that since the entry into force of the Puerto Caldera concession, INCOP has held meetings with the concession holders and the cargo handling enterprises with a view to enforcing labour standards. Please describe in further details the arrangements for cooperation between INCOP and JAPDEVA and the workers' organizations in improving the efficiency of work in ports.

Article 6. Safety, health, welfare and vocational training of dockworkers. The Government indicates in its report received in September 2012 that INCOP and JAPDEVA have planned to provide a list of provisions to be observed in relation to welfare, health, safety and access to vocational and technical training in dock work. In the communication received in July 2010, the three concession holders stated that international standards on dock safety would be adopted as part of a draft code for the management of maritime and dock safety. In the field of training, reference was made to support from international bodies such as the International Maritime Organization, the Central American Commission for Maritime Transport and the Inter-American Committee on Ports.

The Committee welcomes the efforts made by the Government to make progress in the application of the Convention. The Committee invites the Government to provide more information in its next report on the subjects raised in the present observation, including up-to-date information on cooperation between workers' and employers' organizations as well as on the results achieved in a tripartite context to improve the efficiency of dock work (Part V of the report form).

Ecuador

Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152) (ratification: 1988)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

In its observation of 2005 the Committee noted the Government's repeated statement that it planned to update existing standards on safety and health in dock work; that the Handbook of Standards on Safety and Risk Prevention for Dockworkers was being revised; and that the Committee's more specific comments had been forwarded to the Directorate-General of the Merchant Navy and that the Government was awaiting information. Moreover, further to the many comments made since 1993, the Committee urged the Government to take all the necessary steps to bring its national law and practice into line with the Convention. The Committee also requested information on the application of the Convention in practice. In its latest report the Government repeats that the National Council for the Merchant Navy and Docks will deal with the relevant subjects in order to bring the national legislation into line with the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not provide any information on the steps taken to bring its law and practice into line with the Convention; on the process of revision of the abovementioned handbook; on the various matters raised by the Committee for many years; or on the practical application of the Convention as requested by the Committee. The Committee also recalls that in its last observation it indicated to the Government that it had the possibility of availing itself of technical assistance from the Office in order to bring its legislation into line with the Convention and notes the Government's statement in this regard that such a possibility was communicated to the competent authorities and that it would forward any available information in this respect to the Committee. The Committee again urges the Government to take all the necessary steps to bring its law and practice into line with the Convention, including the revision of the abovementioned Handbook, and to provide detailed information in this respect. The Committee also urges the Government to supply detailed information on the manner in which it currently ensures the application of the provisions of the Convention to which it has been referring since 1993, which are set out in detail in its direct request of 2005 and which cover matters referred to in the following articles of the Convention: Article 1; Article 4(1)(f) and (2)(d) in conjunction with Article 16(2) and Article 4(2)(g); Article 5(1); Article 7(1); Article 8; Article 9(2); Article 10; Article 11; Article 13(2) and (4); Article 17(2); Article 18(1), (4) and (5); Article 19(2); Article 20(1), (2) and (4); Article 22(2) and (3); Article 25(1), (2) and (3); Article 26; Article 27(2) and (3)(b) and (c); Articles 28, 29 and 31; Article 32(2) and (4); Article 34(3); Article 36(1) and (3); and Article 38(1) and (2).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

France

Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152) (ratification: 1985)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government concerning the adoption of new regulations designed to improve the application of the Convention, particularly Decree 2006-892 of 19 July 2006 issuing safety and health regulations applicable in cases where workers are exposed to noise-related hazards; the Order of 1 March 2004 concerning the inspection of lifting appliances and gear; the Order of 2 March 2004 concerning maintenance of records for lifting appliances; and the Order of 3 March 2004 concerning the close inspection of tower cranes. The Committee also notes the Government's reply concerning the provisions giving effect to Article 31(2) of the Convention with regard to the safety of workers lashing or unlashng containers. The Committee is also aware of the adoption of Act No. 2008-660 of 4 July 2008 concerning dock reforms and the texts for the implementation thereof. It notes the amendments relating to dock development and the organization of dock work and also the implementation of a new mode of governance of major seaports.

With reference to its comments in 2002 and 2007, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any information on the measures taken to ensure the application of certain provisions of the Convention. The Committee is therefore bound to repeat its previous requests to the Government, which read as follows:

Article 20(1) to (4). Safety measures to be taken where power vehicles operate in the hold; securing of hatch covers; ventilation regulations; safe means of escape from bins or hoppers when dry bulk cargo is being loaded or unloaded. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government's report contains no information on the measures taken to ensure the application of this provision of the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken or envisaged with a view to applying the provisions of this Article.

Article 26(1) to (3). Mutual recognition of arrangements made by Members for testing and examination. The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report that there is not a principle of general recognition of the international equivalence of testing. However, the Government indicates that a principle of equivalence is implicit under the European Treaty. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to ensure the mutual recognition of arrangements made by other Members for the testing, examination, inspection and certification of lifting appliances and items of loose gear forming part of a ship's equipment.

Article 28. Measures to ensure that rigging plans are carried on board every ship. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government's report contains no information on the measures taken to give effect to this Article of the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken or envisaged with a view to applying the provisions of this Article.

In view of the possible practical repercussions of the abovementioned reforms on safety and health in dock work, the Committee requests the Government to supply all relevant information concerning the impact of all the new legislative provisions and regulations concerning the application of the Convention, particularly Articles 4, 5, 7 and 31.

Guinea

Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152) (ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

Article 6(1)(a) and (b) of the Convention. Measures to ensure the safety of portworkers. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that sections 170 and 172 of the Labour Code, establishing that workers have a general obligation to use health and safety equipment correctly and that those responsible for workplaces have an obligation to organize appropriate practical training with regard to safety and hygiene issues for the benefit of workers, ensure the application of Article 6(1)(a) and (b) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to ensure that these general provisions are applied to portworkers.

Article 7. Consultation with employers and workers. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government with regard to sections 288 and 290 of the Labour Code, which provide for the establishment of a consultative committee which is to be responsible, amongst other things, for issuing opinions and formulating proposals and resolutions on labour legislation and regulations and social laws. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application, in practice, of the measures taken to ensure the collaboration between workers and employers provided for in Article 7 of the Convention.

Article 12. Fighting fire. The Committee notes that sections 71, 72 and 76 of the Merchant Marine Code briefly touch upon the question of fire protection systems and equipment, but only in the context of inspections of vessels engaged in international voyages. The Committee requests the Government to take the measures necessary to ensure that appropriate and sufficient firefighting measures are made available for use wherever dock work is carried out.

Article 32(1). Dangerous cargoes. The Committee notes that section 174 of the Labour Code states, in general, that vendors or distributors of dangerous substances, as well as those responsible for workplaces where such substances are used, are required to mark and label them. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure the application, in practice, of this provision, which is general in scope, in the dock sector.

The Committee notes that the information provided by the Government in its report of May 2005 on the application of Articles 16, 18, 19(1), 29, 30, 35 and 37, are general in nature and do not permit the Committee to ascertain whether they are being applied in the dock sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the measures taken to ensure the application of Articles 16, 18, 19(1), 29, 30, 35 and 37, of the Convention and to attach copies of the relevant national laws and regulations.

The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain replies to its request for further information contained in the previous direct request regarding the application of Articles 19(2) and 33, of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide the information requested, as well as information on the measures taken with regard to the application of these Articles.

The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government does not provide any clarification with regard to the measures taken to give effect to Article 6(1)(c), and Articles 2, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 31, 32(2)–(5), and 34 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure the application of these Articles and to keep the Committee informed of any action taken in this regard.

Guyana

Dock Work Convention, 1973 (No. 137) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report has not been received. It must therefore repeat its previous observation which read as follows:

The Committee noted the Government's report for the period ending September 2002, according to which there has been no change in the application of the Convention. It requests the Government to give a general appreciation on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, including for instance extracts from the reports of the authorities entrusted with the application of the laws and regulations, and the available information on the numbers of dockworkers on the registers of workers in docks maintained in accordance with Article 3 of the Convention and of any variations in their numbers (Part V of the report form).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

New Zealand

Protection against Accidents (Dockers) Convention (Revised), 1932 (No. 32) (ratification: 1938)

The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report, including the attached comments by Business New Zealand and the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU) on the application of the Convention in law and in practice. In particular, the Committee notes the response by the Government, which indicates that the Health and Safety in Employment (HSE) Act 1992 requires employers to take all practicable steps to ensure the safety of workers while at work, and that compliance with the HSE Act is consistent with the intent of this Convention. The Committee notes that, in line with Article 1 of the Convention, the HSE Act covers all people working ashore, as well as those working on board ships. The Committee notes however, that the specific provisions of the Convention are reflected in the national Code of Practice for Health and Safety in Port Operations (Revised May 2004), which the Government has indicated is a statement of preferred work practice and provides only a recommended means of compliance with the requirements of the HSE Act. The Committee asks the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that the requirements of the Convention are enforced in practice, and penalties imposed for any breaches.

In addition, the Committee notes the comments by the NZCTU concerning health risks associated with the work of crane and forklift operators (CFOs), and in particular concerning the occurrence of musculo-skeletal discomfort (MSD). The Committee notes that this information falls outside the scope of this Convention, but may be relevant in relation to the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155). The Committee will examine these elements of the NZCTU communication, and any reply the Government wishes to make in this regard, along with the Government's next report concerning Convention No. 155.

Article 10 of the Convention. Sufficiently competent and reliable persons shall be employed. The Committee notes the comments by the NZCTU in relation to the recent move by New Zealand's port industry to "casualise" the workforce through the use of contractors. The NZCTU alleges that this move has resulted in a decline in training, or the provision of condensed training, and an increase in accidents, some fatal, mainly due to human error. The NZCTU further points to research and informal reports which suggest that there are higher accident and death rates at ports having contracted out stevedoring work. According to the NZCTU, there were three work related fatalities at the Port of Tauranga in 2010 and 2011. Worker error was a factor in all three fatalities and concerned two contractors and a seafarer. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that only sufficiently competent and reliable persons shall be employed, as required by Article 10 of the Convention, and in particular to respond to the comments by the NZCTU.

Article 12. Precautions deemed necessary to ensure the proper protection of workers. The Committee notes the comments by the NZCTU concerning the use of methyl bromide in timber defumigation operations at some ports, and in particular its association with an increased risk of motor neuron disease (MND). The NZCTU alleges that five former workers from the Port of Nelson are known to have died from MND. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information on how national laws or regulations ensure the proper protection of workers, with respect to the abovementioned comments by the NZCTU.

Article 17 and Part V of the report form. Application in practice and an efficient system of inspection. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning a 2007 project by Maritime New Zealand to reduce short and long term injuries in the stevedore workforce, when working on board ships. The Government also indicates that due to a continuing concern about the number of significant failures of lifting appliances during cargo operations on ships while they are in New Zealand ports, Maritime New Zealand conducted a Focused Inspection Campaign (FIC) in this area in 2006 as part of their routine Port State Control inspections. The FIC highlighted that there were a relatively high number of non-compliances, especially with inspection and maintenance procedures, and that these findings were submitted to the International Maritime Organization (IMO). The Committee welcomes the information that a further submission to the IMO, by the Government, with co-sponsorship from the Governments of Chile, Japan, Norway and the Republic of Korea, has been made and proposes the inclusion of a new output aimed at developing requirements for the construction and installation of on board lifting appliances, and thereby mirroring the requirements under this Convention and the Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152) within the Safety of Life at Sea Convention (SOLAS). The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, and in particular on any progress in relation to the work being undertaken by the IMO's subcommittee on ship design and equipment, currently scheduled for March 2013.

Inspection visits and investigations in ports. The Committee notes that the NZCTU has again raised concerns regarding the lack of common practice concerning random inspections. The NZCTU also alleges that there has not been any marked increase in independent investigations of accidents by Maritime New Zealand or the Department of Labour, other than those initiated following a fatality or severe injury. The Committee further notes the comments by the NZCTU concerning the lack of mandatory requirements to inspect mooring ropes as part of the Port State Control inspections, following the death of a port worker as a result of a snapped mooring rope, and that in at least five other serious accidents between 1999 and 2009, poor mooring rope inspection, maintenance or operation led to serious injury or death. The Committee asks the Government to provide further information in regard to the comments raised by the NZCTU concerning labour inspection in ports.

Inspection service resources. The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government that in May 2012, an additional NZ$37 million of funding for workplace health and safety was announced for the next four years, and that amongst other things, this funding will be used to increase the number of front-line health and safety inspectors by 20 per cent. The Committee asks the Government to provide more detailed information on labour inspections in ports, including extracts from inspectors' reports, and, if such statistics are available, information regarding the number of workers covered by the Convention, the number and nature of contraventions, and the number, nature and causes of accidents reported.

Consultation and action on safety and health issues. The Committee notes Part 2A of the HSE Act, attached to the Government's report, which provides for employee participation in processes relating to health and safety in the place of work. The NZCTU has expressed concern about the reluctance by port management to consult with workers on changes to port operations and facilities that have health and safety implications. The NZCTU notes that the Government has followed up individual complaints concerning inadequate safety compliance at ports, but that more general preventive action is warranted. The Committee asks the Government to indicate any measures taken to ensure that Part 2A of the HSE Act is applied in ports, and whether any general preventive action on safety compliance at ports is being considered.

Sweden

The Committee notes the brief report submitted by the Government including a reference to information provided in the context of its application of the Dock Work Convention, 1973 (No. 137).

Comments by the Swedish Transport Workers' Union (STUW). With reference to observations submitted by STUW in 2002, both in relation to Convention No. 137 and the present Convention, the Committee notes that the Government agrees with STUW that prolonged stress has negative health consequences; that if, in addition, the workload is so heavy that the provisions cannot be implemented, there is a risk that accidents occur; and that risk assessments are important to prevent ill health and accidents. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide further information on whether and to what extent stress has been taken into account in the context of risk assessments made in the context of dock work in Swedish ports and the impact of such measures.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee notes the information provided regarding inspections carried out in the ports of Göteborg, Uddevalla, and Varberg, the requests for action to be taken and the statistical data concerning accidents at work for the period 2007–11, that are attached to the report of the Government on Convention No. 137. However, it notes that on the basis of the information provided, it is not possible to determine the number of accidents that are related to dockworkers. In the light of the foregoing, the Committee requests the Government to provide further information and the actions taken as a follow-up to the reported inspections carried out in the ports of Göteborg, Uddevalla and Varberg; the number of occupational accidents and diseases reported among dockworkers for the years 2007–11 and onwards; and any further relevant information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in the country.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 27 (Angola, Australia, Austria, Bulgaria, Burundi, Canada, Czech Republic, Estonia, France, Germany, Honduras, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Lithuania, Mexico, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Spain, Uruguay, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, Viet Nam); Convention No. 32 (Belgium, Bulgaria, China, China: Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, Honduras, India, Kenya, Slovenia, Tajikistan, Uruguay); Convention No. 137 (Afghanistan, Australia, Brazil, Cuba, Egypt, Finland, France, Iraq, Kenya, Mauritius, Nigeria, Norway, Poland, Portugal, United Republic of Tanzania, Uruguay); Convention No. 152 (Cuba, Finland, Germany, Iraq, Italy, Lebanon, Republic of Moldova, Netherlands, Seychelles, Turkey).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following States in answer to a direct request with regard to Convention No. 32 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, United Kingdom: Isle of Man).

Indigenous and tribal peoples

Argentina

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) (ratification: 2000)

Communication from the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA). Eviction of communities. Consultations required by the Convention. The Committee notes the reply sent in March 2012 by the Government to the observations from the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA) received in August 2011. The CTA highlighted the violent evictions of indigenous communities from the territories that they traditionally occupy in the provinces of Formosa (Toba-Qom Navogoh, La Primavera community), Rio Negro (the Paichil Antriao Mapuche community), Tucumán (the Chuschagasta and India Quilmes communities), situations that were referred to in the observation made by the Committee of Experts in 2011. The Government's reply does not contain any information relating to the abovementioned events, but the National Institute for Indigenous Affairs (INAI), in its report, recalls its functions as a decentralized body with indigenous participation which operates within the Ministry of Social Development. The INAI draws attention to the three fundamental laws for the effective recognition of the rights of indigenous peoples (Act No. 26160 of 2006 concerning the emergency relating to ownership of lands traditionally occupied by indigenous communities and its extension by means of Act No. 26554 of 2009; Act No. 26206 of 2006 concerning national education, and Act No. 26522 of 2009 concerning audiovisual communication services). The INAI indicates that by means of Decree No. 700 the Commission for Analysis of the Implementation of Indigenous Community Ownership was set up in May 2010. In October 2010, the Commission submitted a preliminary bill to the Ministry of Social Development. The Committee also notes the fact that the INAI, with the participation of indigenous organizations and the Council for Indigenous Participation (CPI), held a university event in November 2011 which focused, among other things, on the need to complete the territorial survey and the demarcation of indigenous community territories throughout the country, promote the dispatch of the draft legislation concerning indigenous community ownership and also promote the establishment of a commission for preparing draft legislation on consultation and participation to enable the application of Convention No. 169. In its new observations received in August 2012, with a contribution from the Observatory for the Human Rights of Indigenous Peoples (ODHPI), the CTA indicates that the legislative process is under way for a preliminary draft national Civil and Commercial Code, which includes provisions concerning indigenous community ownership. The CTA states that there is no connection between the provisions of the preliminary draft that is currently passing through the legislative process and those that were prepared by the commission established in May 2010. In the report received in November 2012, the Government indicates that the reform of the Civil and Commercial Code incorporates the right to community possession and ownership of lands traditionally occupied by indigenous communities, the right to consultation and participation, and respect for forms of internal organization in accordance with the world view of indigenous peoples. The Committee notes that a bicameral commission of the National Congress is holding public hearings to debate the reform in various provinces of the country and the INAI is ensuring effective indigenous participation in the hearings. The Committee repeats its request to the Government to provide detailed information in the report due in 2013 on the steps taken to investigate the allegations of violent evictions and deaths in the indigenous communities referred to in the observation made in 2011. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information enabling it to examine in detail how it has been ensured that indigenous peoples have been consulted whenever consideration has been given to legislative or administrative measures which may affect them directly (Article 6(1)(a) of the Convention). The Committee hopes that the Government will indicate the manner in which a new Civil and Commercial Code has ensured that full effect is given to the provisions of the Convention relating to lands traditionally occupied by indigenous peoples and to natural resources pertaining to their lands.

Communication from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE). The Committee notes that the IOE has submitted observations in August 2012 on the application in law and practice of Articles 6, 7, 15 and 16 of the Convention concerning the requirement of consultation. In this regard, the IOE raises the following issues: the identification of representative institutions, the definition of indigenous territory and the lack of consensus of indigenous and tribal peoples, and the importance for the Committee to be aware of the consequences of the issue in relation to legal security, financial costs and certainty of both public and private investment. The IOE refers to the difficulties, costs and negative impact that the failure by States to comply with the obligation of consultation can have on the projects undertaken by both public and private enterprises. Among other effects, the IOE observed that the erroneous application and interpretation of the requirement of prior consultation can be a legal obstacle and lead to business difficulties, harm the reputation of enterprises and result in financial costs. The IOE also states that the difficulties to comply with the obligation of consultation may have an impact on the projects that enterprises may wish to carry out with a view to creating a conducive environment for economic and social development, the creation of decent and productive work and the sustainable development of society as a whole. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report any comments that it deems appropriate on the observations made by the IOE.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the tripartite committee (representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution). Consultations at national level in the CPI. Register of indigenous communities. Regularization of lands. As follow-up to the request made by the Governing Body in November 2008 further to a representation submitted in August 2006 by the Educational Workers' Union of Río Negro (UNTER) (GB.303/19/7), the Committee requested information, in the observation made in 2011, on the progress of the issues that were pending at national level and in the Río Negro province. The Committee notes the partial reply provided by the Government, by means of the report received in November 2012, to some of the issues raised at national level. The INAI recalls that the CPI is a forum for participation and consultation which has adopted regulatory statutes governing its operation and which has expanded its membership to some 113 representatives. The National Programme for Identification of the Status of Indigenous Community Lands (Re.Te.C.I.) holds bimonthly meetings with the National Committee of the CPI, composed of 25 representatives at the regional and national levels. Furthermore, the Follow-Up Committee of the National Forum for Territorial Organizations of Original Peoples (ENOTPO) is working in conjunction with the Re.Te.C.I. National Programme, in which eight representatives participate at the regional and national levels. The ENOTPO is an umbrella organization for some 40 indigenous territorial organizations. Pursuant to Act No. 26160 and Re.Te.C.I., 950 communities have been identified for the purposes of recording their land status and 367 communities and over 3 million hectares have had their status recorded. A total of 328 indigenous communities have legal personality that has been registered in the National Register of Indigenous Communities (RENACI), 337 communities are registered with provincial organizations in the context of agreements concluded with the INAI, and some 600 communities are registered with other competent provincial organizations. The Government states that there have been no cases to date of indigenous communities for which registration of their legal personality in the national register has been refused. The Committee also notes the list of various bills relating to subjects covered by the Convention which are undergoing the legislative process but have not yet been approved. The Committee invites the Government to include with its next report a copy of the regulations of the CPI and a summary of the administrative and legislative measures which have been the subject of the consultations required by the Convention in the abovementioned institutional context.

Río Negro province. Consultation, participation and traditional activities of indigenous peoples. The Committee notes the information sent in the report received in November 2012 indicating that in the province of Río Negro some 320,000 hectares of land have been regularized in favour of indigenous communities. In the observation made in 2011, it was recalled that the Mapuche and Mapuche–Tehuelche peoples were organized through the Coordinating Committee of the Mapuche People's Parliament, which proposed candidates for the positions of advisers and presidents of the Council for the Development of Indigenous Communities (CODECI). The Government also indicated that indigenous stockbreeders were able to have access easily to marks and signs certificates and carry on their activities under conditions of equality. With reference to marks and signs, the Government indicated that it was difficult to grant ownership of marks and signs where no title to the lands had been obtained, resulting in difficulties in the circulation of livestock for sale. The Committee refers once again to the conclusions and recommendations of the report adopted in November 2008 by the Governing Body (document GB.303/19/7), and requests the Government to include in its next report up-to-date information on progress made regarding the regularization of indigenous community property and on the manner in which the procedures for consultation and participation provided for in the Convention are being implemented at provincial level. The Government is also requested to indicate whether the regularization of lands has facilitated the grant of certificates of marks and/or signs (livestock ownership titles), since stockbreeding is a traditional activity of the Mapuche people (Article 23).

Coordinated and systematic policy. The Committee notes that, by Decree No. 791/2012 of May 2012, the INAI was again authorized to designate a delegate for each of the ethnic groups of the country in order to form the Coordination Council already provided for under section 10 of Act No. 23.302 of November 1985 concerning indigenous policy and support for aboriginal communities. Moreover, the Government emphasizes, in the report received in November 2012, that the inclusion of the right to consultation and participation in the draft revised Civil and Commercial Code would entail the need to adopt a special law regulating indigenous consultation and participation. The Committee requests the Government to supply information in its next report on any progress made regarding the regulation of the right to participation and consultation in accordance with the Convention. The Committee again requests the Government to attach copies of the records of the meetings of the Coordination Council. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate how indigenous participation councils take part in the INAI decision-making process. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide details of the distribution of responsibilities and the coordination mechanisms established between the Coordination Council and the Advisory Council (provided for in Act No. 23302 of 1985), on the one hand, and the CPI (provided for in Act No. 26160 of 2006), on the other (Articles 2 and 33 of the Convention).

Article 14. Lands. The Committee notes the detailed information sent by the Government regarding the land ownership regularization processes which have been undertaken mainly in Jujuy province (over 1.6 million hectares) and in the provinces of Río Negro (320,000 hectares), Chubut (104,893 hectares) and Chaco (320,000 hectares). The Committee invites the Government to include up-to-date information in its next report on the number of beneficiary communities and the surface area of lands regularized in the context of the National Programme for Identification of the Status of Indigenous Community Lands and the manner in which the participation of the communities concerned by the land status identification process has been ensured. The Government is also requested to include information on the land regularization processes which have been undertaken or are pending in other provinces concerned (Buenos Aires, Entre Ríos, Formosa, Neuquén, Salta, Tucumán and Tierra del Fuego, as mentioned by the Government in its report), and also on any difficulties encountered in completing the recognition of indigenous community possession and ownership in the country.

The Committee invites the Government, when preparing the report due in 2013, to consult the social partners and indigenous organizations with regard to the measures taken to give effect to the Convention. The Committee hopes that the Government will submit a report in 2013 which contains specific information on all the other subjects referred to in its observation and direct request of 2011 and on the results achieved by the measures taken to give effect to each of the provisions of the Convention.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

Communication from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE). The Committee notes that the IOE has submitted observations in August 2012 on the application in law and practice of Articles 6, 7, 15 and 16 of the Convention concerning the requirement of consultation. In this regard, the IOE raises the following issues: the identification of representative institutions, the definition of indigenous territory and the lack of consensus of indigenous and tribal peoples, and the importance for the Committee to be aware of the consequences of the issue in relation to legal security, financial costs and certainty of both public and private investment. The IOE refers to the difficulties, costs and negative impact that the failure by States to comply with the obligation of consultation can have on the projects undertaken by both public and private enterprises. Among other effects, the IOE observed that the erroneous application and interpretation of the requirement of prior consultation can be a legal obstacle and lead to business difficulties, harm the reputation of enterprises and result in financial costs. The IOE also states that the difficulties to comply with the obligation of consultation may have an impact on the projects that enterprises may wish to carry out with a view to creating a conducive environment for economic and social development, the creation of decent and productive work and the sustainable development of society as a whole. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report any comments that it deems appropriate on the observations made by the IOE.

Part VIII of the report form. Communications from indigenous peoples. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not supplied its comments on the observations from two workers' confederations which were sent to it in September and October 2011. The International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) drew the Committee's attention to a document from the Democratic Bolivian Assembly rejecting the construction of the Villa Tunari – San Ignacio de Moxos highway. The Bolivian Workers' Federation (COB) submitted a document to denounce the lack of prior consultation and the criminalization of social protest in Bolivia. The COB expressed its support for the declaration from the Ayllus y Markas del Qullasuyu National Council (CONAMAQ) signed in Trinidad on 17 August 2011. The Committee notes that CONAMAQ, among other things, announced its rejection of the construction of the Villa Tunari – San Ignacio de Moxos highway since it would affect the TIPNIS (Isiboro Sécure Indigenous Territory and National Park) territories and because the right to free and informed prior consultation had not been observed. CONAMAQ demanded that all the ancestral territories be restored and title thereto be granted and that the corresponding territorial compensation be made. CONAMAQ called for the adoption of a law concerning the right to consultation and participation in the benefits deriving from mining and other natural resources. CONAMAQ requested access to the Development Fund for Indigenous and Original Peoples and Campesino [farming] Communities to be extended, with the inclusion of gender mainstreaming, to other indigenous communities. CONAMAQ asked that, in the 2011 census, new ancestral nations and indigenous peoples that predated the colonial era, including the Afro-Bolivian people, should be identified by name, so as to consolidate the existence of indigenous peoples in the Plurinational State of Bolivia.

The Committee understands that the contract to construct the Villa Tunari – San Ignacio de Moxos highway was awarded in 2008 and construction began in 2009. In February 2009, a representative indigenous organization – the TIPNIS Subcommittee – was recognized by the Government as the sole collective owner of the territory with a total surface area of 1,091,656 hectares. The Committee observes that further to the “VIII Grand Indigenous March” which took place in August–September 2011 and in accordance with sections 1, 2, 3 and 4 of Act No. 180 of 24 October 2011 on the Protection of the Indigenous Territory and National Park Isoboro Sécure, the TIPNIS was given socio-cultural and natural heritage status and recognized as an area of environmental conservation and historical reproduction and the habitat of the Chimán, Turacré and Mojeño-Trinitario indigenous peoples. It was also stipulated that neither the Villa Tunari – San Ignacio de Moxos highway nor any other highway would cross the TIPNIS. However, by means of Act No. 222 of 10 February 2012 on the Consultation of Indigenous Peoples of TIPNIS, the three indigenous communities of the TIPNIS were invited to attend consultations. Section 4 of Act No. 222 provides that the purpose of the consultations is to reach an agreement between the State and the three indigenous peoples on two matters: “(a) to determine whether or not the TIPNIS should be a protected area, in order to promote the development of the activities of the Mojeño-Trinitario, Chimán and Yuracaré indigenous peoples, and also the construction of the Villa Tunari – San Ignacio de Moxos highway”; (b) to establish the means of ensuring the protection of the TIPNIS, including the immediate eviction of illegal settlements within the TIPNIS. By means of Act No. 240 of 10 May 2012, Act No. 222 was amended, establishing that the maximum period from start to finish of the consultations should be 210 days following the promulgation of Act No. 222 (i.e. the consultations should be concluded on 7 September 2012).

The Committee observes that the Plurinational Constitutional Court issued ruling No. 0300/2012 dated 18 June 2012 declaring the constitutionality of the invitation to attend consultations issued to the TIPNIS indigenous peoples (section 1 of Act No. 222) and of the functions of the Inter-Cultural Agency for Democratic Consolidation (SIFDE), tasked with observation and monitoring of the consultation process (section 7 of Act No. 222). The Court declared the conditional constitutionality of section 1 of Act No. 222 in relation to the phrase "... and establish the content of this process [of free and informed prior consultation with the TIPNIS indigenous peoples] and its procedures" and the other provisions [sections 3, 4(a), 6 and 9] of Act No. 222. The Plurinational Constitutional Court stated that the consultations are conditional on being coordinated in observance of the horizontal relationship between the State and the TIPNIS indigenous peoples and urged the legislative and executive authorities to draw up an agreed joint protocol with the indigenous peoples with the full participation of their institutions. The Committee stresses the importance of developing appropriate and permanent mechanisms and procedures for the consultation of the peoples concerned, considering that the purpose of the Convention is to ensure the participation of indigenous peoples, through their representative organizations in decision-making on issues, programmes and policies that affect their interests. The Committee requests the Government to indicate how it has ensured compliance with the Convention in the context of the situation generated by the construction of the road Villa Tunari – San Ignacio de Moxos. The Committee hopes that mechanisms for dialogue have been established which enjoy the confidence of the parties and which, through good faith negotiations in accordance with the Convention, have enabled appropriate solutions to be found to the situation arising from the construction of the Villa Tunari – San Ignacio de Moxos highway. The Committee requests the Government to include detailed information in its next report on the issues raised in the present observation and on the manner in which account has been taken of the interests and priorities of the indigenous peoples concerned. The Committee invites the Government, when preparing its next report, to consult the social partners and indigenous organizations on the measures taken to give effect to the Convention. The Committee hopes that the Government will submit a report in 2013 containing specific information on the issues raised in the comments made in 2009 and on the results achieved by the measures taken to give effect to each of the provisions of the Convention.

Brazil

The Committee notes that the Government's report received in September 2012 contains up-to-date information relating to the observation made in 2011. In addition, the Government sent detailed communications in April and May 2012 providing information on the process for the regulation of prior consultation. The Committee invites the Government, when preparing its next report, to consult the social partners and indigenous organizations on the measures taken to give effect to the Convention (Parts VII and VIII of the report form). The Committee hopes that the Government will submit a report in 2013 containing updated information on the issues raised in the present observation and in the observation made in 2011 and on the results achieved by the measures taken to give effect to each of the provisions of the Convention.

Communication from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE). The Committee notes that the IOE has submitted comments in August 2012 on the application in law and practice of Articles 6, 7, 15 and 16 of the Convention concerning the requirement of consultation. In this regard, the IOE raises the following issues: the identification of representative institutions, the definition of indigenous territory and the lack of consensus of indigenous and tribal peoples, and the importance for the Committee to be aware of the consequences of the issue in relation to legal security, financial costs and certainty of both public and private investment. The IOE refers to the difficulties, costs and negative impact that the failure by States to comply with the obligation of consultation can have on the projects undertaken by both public and private enterprises. Among other effects, the IOE observed that the erroneous application and interpretation of the requirement of prior consultation can be a legal obstacle and lead to business difficulties, harm the reputation of enterprises and result in financial costs. The IOE also states that the difficulties to comply with the obligation of consultation may have an impact on the projects that enterprises may wish to carry out with a view to creating a conducive environment for economic and social development, the creation of decent and productive work and the sustainable development of society as a whole. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report any comments that it deems appropriate on the observations made by the IOE.

Regulation of consultation mechanisms. The Committee notes with interest the publication in January 2012 of Inter-ministerial Order No. 35 of the General Secretariat of the Office of the President of the Republic and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs establishing an inter-ministerial working group (GTI) for the formulation of the proposed regulations on the right to consultation. In July 2012, new government institutions (the Ministry of Culture and the Chico Mendes Institute) were invited to participate in the process and mechanisms were set up for dialogue between the GTI and civil society. A Facilitation Committee was created composed of 12 indigenous representatives and 12 Quilombola representatives with an equal number of members representing government bodies (24 representatives). The GTI intends to maintain an ongoing and high-quality dialogue with indigenous peoples, Quilombola communities, other traditional communities and civil society. Under the auspices of the GTI, various activities were carried out with indigenous leaders and new entities were included in the consultation process. The Government has provided information on the consultations planned for 2013 and intends to prepare proposed regulations for 2014. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report detailed information on the progress of the consultations held to give effect to Articles 6, 7, 15 and 16 of the Convention.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the tripartite committee (representation made under article 24 of the Constitution of the ILO). Legislation relating to public forests. In its 2011 observation, the Committee noted the report of the Governing Body (document GB.304/14/7, March 2009) on a representation submitted in October 2005 by the Union of Engineers of the Federal District (SENGE/DF). In this representation, it was alleged that no consultations had been held with indigenous peoples, as required by the Convention, with regard to draft legislation on the administration of public forests. In the report received in September 2012, the Government indicates that the draft legislation became Act No. 11284/2006 and that Decree No. 7747 of 5 June 2012 established a National Policy for the Environmental and Territorial Management of Indigenous Lands (PNGATI). The Government indicates that this is an innovative process of consultation with indigenous peoples which will enable them to strengthen their effective contribution to the conservation of biodiversity through the traditional community management of natural resources. The Committee refers to the recommendations made by the Governing Body in paragraph 62 of document GB.304/14/7 of March 2009 and invites the Government to include up-to-date information in its next report which will enable it to examine:

- (a) the measures adopted to complement the consultation process concerning the impact of timber concessions envisaged in the Act concerning the administration of public forests on the indigenous peoples likely to be affected, taking account of Article 6 of the Convention and the conclusions of the tripartite committee set out in paragraphs 42–44 of the report;
- (b) the regulatory and practical measures planned to implement the consultation process laid down in Article 15(2) of the Convention, including the procedural requirements stipulated in Article 6, before licences are granted for timber exploration and/or exploitation as envisaged in the Act concerning the administration of public forests;
- (c) the manner in which it is ensured that the consultation process required under Article 15 of the Convention is implemented in relation to the lands referred to in paragraph 52 of the report, whatever their legal status, provided that they comply with the requirement set out in Article 13(2) of the Convention (lands which the peoples concerned occupy or otherwise use);
- (d) the manner in which it is ensured that the indigenous peoples participate in the formulation, implementation and evaluation of plans and programmes related to the logging activities referred to above, including the determination of the lands to be excluded under the terms of section 11(IV) of the Act concerning the administration of public forests (Article 7(1) of the Convention);
- (e) the manner in which it is ensured that, in accordance with Article 7(3) of the Convention, studies are carried out, in cooperation with the peoples concerned, with a view to assessing the social, spiritual and environmental impact on the indigenous peoples concerned of the logging activities authorized by the Act;
- (f) the manner in which it is ensured that the indigenous peoples affected by logging activities participate, wherever possible, in the benefits of such activities, and receive fair compensation for any loss or damage which they may sustain as a result of such activities;
- (g) the manner in which it is ensured that logging activities do not affect the rights of ownership and possession laid down in Article 14 of the Convention; and
- (h) any special measures adopted to safeguard the persons, institutions, property, labour, cultures and environment of the indigenous peoples affected by logging activities.

Relocation of Quilombola communities (municipality of Alcantara, State of Maranhao). With reference to the observations that have been made for many years, the Government provided further information in September 2012 on the establishment of the bi-national enterprise Alcantara Cyclone Space (ACS) on lands traditionally occupied by Quilombola communities. The Government recalls that in the Technical Study on Identification and Demarcation of the Quilombola Territory, published in the Diário Oficial in November 2008, around 78 million hectares were attributed to 3,350 Quilombola families. Moreover, the Palmares Cultural Foundation issued a technical opinion in 2010 calling for all the direct and indirect impacts associated with the project to be identified and for measures to be taken to mitigate and compensate for the impact of the project on the Quilombola communities. In the framework of the legal action taken by the Office of the Federal Attorney-General in August 2003, alleging that the relocation of the Quilombola population for the construction of the Cyclone-4 complex had overlooked the rights of the communities affected, the federal Government convened a conciliation hearing on 6 March 2009, during which the ACS enterprise formally recognized the land rights of the Quilombola communities of Alcantara and accepted that the operations of the Cyclone-4 complex would be limited to the surface area occupied by the launch base. The Committee notes that, in October 2011, in the context of that legal action, the federal Government asserted that the process of the demarcation of the lands had not yet been completed and, according to the indications provided in the latest report, the legal process is following its course. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on current legal actions. It hopes that the Government will provide more specific information in its next report on the measures that guarantee the effective protection of the rights of Quilombola communities to the lands that they traditionally occupy in the municipality of Alcantara (Article 14). Please indicate whether Quilombola communities have been removed from their usual lands, and the measures taken for their relocation and compensation (Article 16). As requested in the report form, please describe the steps taken in that case to obtain their free and informed consent.

Belo Monte hydroelectric plant (Pará State). In its previous comments, among other points related to the construction of a hydroelectric plant, the Committee noted that the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights had issued precautionary measures on 1 April 2011 (MC-382-10), calling for the suspension of the licensing process until certain minimum conditions had been met relating to the consultation of the indigenous peoples affected. Furthermore, a federal court in the State of Pará ordered a precautionary measure in September 2011 prohibiting the construction company from making any alterations to the river bed affected by the construction of the hydroelectric plant. In the report received in September 2012, the Government indicates that the surface that would be flooded by the project has been reduced from 1,225 square kilometres to 516 square kilometres. In contrast with the projects that were designed in the 1980s and 1990s, the Government indicates that indigenous lands would not be flooded. The National Foundation for Indigenous Affairs (FUNAI) held 42 meetings with indigenous communities between December 2007 and October 2009, as well as other activities to provide information on the environmental impact of the project. The FUNAI is intervening to ensure that the concerns of the communities affected are taken into account by the enterprise responsible for the project and that relevant information on the project is disseminated. The Government also recalls that the Supreme Labour Court authorized the continuation of work on the hydroelectric plant. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on current legal actions in relation to the Belo Monte hydroelectric plant. It invites the Government to indicate the manner in which the effective protection is ensured of the rights of indigenous communities to the lands that they traditionally occupied and which are allocated for the construction of the hydroelectric plant (Article 14). As requested by the report form, please indicate whether steps have been taken for the relocation and compensation of the communities affected if they have been removed from their traditional lands and describe in particular the steps taken in that case to obtain their free and informed consent (Article 16).

Transposition of the San Francisco river. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in the report received in September 2012 on the measures adopted by the FUNAI to consult and inform the indigenous peoples that may be affected by the project for the transposition of the San Francisco river (PIRSF). The FUNAI had the opportunity to undertake studies and programmes for the communities liable to be affected by the impact of the project. The Committee invites the Government to provide with its next report a copy of the “Prognóstico das Modificações no Cenário Sociocultural dos Grupos Indígenas”, the study that identified the principal problems in the Truká, Tumbalalá, Pipipan and Kambiwá lands. Please indicate the manner in which the indigenous peoples concerned participated in the studies and programmes undertaken by the FUNAI and how their interests and priorities have been taken into account. The Committee hopes that the Government will also include information on current legal actions and, in particular, on the decision on the constitutionality of the project for the transposition of the San Francisco river, which is currently before the Federal Supreme Court of Justice.

Construction of a hydroelectric plant on the Cotingo river. The Government recalls, in the report received in September 2012, that the project for the construction of a hydroelectric plant on the Cotingo river, located on indigenous land at Raposa Serra do Sol (Roraima State), is still awaiting authorization by Congress. The Committee notes that, even though a draft Legislative Decree is under examination, the hydroelectric plant is not referred to in the National Energy Plan 2030 or in the Ten-Year Plan for Energy Expansion. The Committee once again requests the Government to ensure that any projects affecting indigenous lands are subject to full consultation with indigenous peoples and that their views, priorities and interests are taken into account when decisions are taken. The Committee reiterates the hope that the peoples concerned will be able to cooperate in the impact studies that are carried out in accordance with Article 7 of the Convention. The Committee invites the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on any developments in this respect.

Mining on the indigenous lands of the Cinta Larga people. The Government states that the Laje garimpo (small-scale mine), from which it had been necessary to expel intruders who had violated the rights of the indigenous community, has been closed since March 2012. The Committee notes that joint measures were taken by the FUNAI and the federal police to investigate the situation in the garimpo. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken to protect the Cinta Larga indigenous communities. Please also provide information on the findings of the investigations carried out by the federal police and the penalties ordered in proven cases of intrusion (Article 18).

Situation of the Guaraní Kaiowá peoples in Mato Grosso do Sul. Guaraní M'byá community in the municipality of Eldorado do Sul (Rio Grande do Sul State). The Government indicates that at a meeting coordinated by the FUNAI and held in Dourados (Mato Grosso do Sul) on 28 November 2011, the Office of the Federal Attorney-General, the Human Rights Secretariat of the Office of the President and the General Secretariat of the Office of the President of the Republic discussed strategies to overcome the legal obstacles created by non-indigenous agricultural landowners and to find solutions to speed up pending cases concerning indigenous lands. The FUNAI published studies recognizing the traditional occupation of the Panambi – Lagoa Seca indigenous territory by the Guaraní Kaiowá peoples. In addition, police presence in the region was increased in order to protect the indigenous communities. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing information on the demarcation of the lands traditionally occupied by indigenous communities in the southern cone of Mato Grosso do Sul and on the results achieved by the public security plan to ensure the physical integrity and security of the indigenous communities in the region. Please also provide information in the next report on the situation of the Guaraní M'byá community in the municipality of Eldorado do Sul referred to in the comments by the Workers' Union of the Federal University of Santa Catarina (SINTUFSC), which were forwarded to the Government in November 2008.

Article 14. Demarcation and titling of lands for the Quilombola communities. The Government has supplied up-to-date information on the initiatives taken by the National Institute on Settlement and Agrarian Reform (INCRA) to conduct 1,167 land certification processes for the Quilombola communities. The Committee notes that 121 titles were issued, enabling the certification of nearly 1 million hectares for 109 territories, 190 communities and nearly 12,000 families. Nearly half of these territories are located in Pará State. The Palmares Cultural Foundation (FCP), associated with the Ministry of Culture, is participating in the process of self-identification of the Quilombola communities. The FCP is supporting 154 court cases concerning 56 remaining Quilombola communities in 19 states in the country. According to the Government's report, the regulations on the right of ownership sometimes makes it difficult for the communities to obtain definitive ownership title. The Committee notes that a Federal Supreme Court of Justice ruling is pending on the constitutionality of Decree No. 4887/2003 of 20 November 2003 regulating the procedure for the demarcation and titling of lands for the remaining Quilombola communities. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing information on this matter.

Chile

With reference to the comments made in 2010, the Committee notes the replies provided by the Government in September and November 2011, and the additional information provided in September, October and November 2012. Furthermore, the Committee notes the content of the observations sent by the Single Central Organization of Workers (CUT), the National Confederation of Artisanal Fishers of Chile (CONAPACH) and the National Confederation of Unions of Bakery Workers (CONAPAN), which were forwarded to the Government in September, October and November 2010. CONAPACH and CONAPAN provided a detailed alternative report from the Aymara people. The CUT forwarded a detailed alternative report prepared in the Araucanía region, as well as documentation prepared by the Coordinating Unit of Mapuche Organizations and Communities from the Araucanía region and the Pelón Xaru Mapuche Nation Peoples Culture Centre. The CUT forwarded specific information from the Kawésqar indigenous community located in Puerto Edén, the Rapa Nui people and representatives of urban Mapuche organizations. In the report received in September 2011, the Government indicated that it had replied to the substantive issues raised by the indigenous organizations.

Communication from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE). The Committee notes that the IOE has submitted observations in August 2012 on the application in law and practice of Articles 6, 7, 15 and 16 of the Convention concerning the requirement of consultation. In this regard, the IOE raises the following issues: the identification of representative institutions, the definition of indigenous territory and the lack of consensus of indigenous and tribal peoples, and the importance for the Committee to be aware of the consequences of the issue in relation to legal security, financial costs and certainty of both public and private investment. The IOE refers to the difficulties, costs and negative impact that the failure by States to comply with the obligation of consultation can have on the projects undertaken by both public and private enterprises. Among other effects, the IOE observed that the erroneous application and interpretation of the requirement of prior consultation can be a legal obstacle and lead to business difficulties, harm the reputation of enterprises and result in financial costs. The IOE also states that the difficulties to comply with the obligation of consultation may have an impact on the projects that enterprises may wish to carry out with a view to creating a conducive environment for economic and social development, the creation of decent and productive work and the sustainable development of society as a whole. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report any comments that it deems appropriate on the observations made by the IOE.

Article 3 of the Convention. Human rights and fundamental freedoms. With reference to the serious dispute between the Government and the Mapuche peoples referred to in its 2010 direct request, the Committee notes with interest that Act No. 20477, adopted on 30 December 2010, modified the jurisdiction of military tribunals. Civilians and minors may in no event be subject to the jurisdiction of military tribunals as defendants, although they retain the right to assistance to take action in military tribunals as victims or initiators of penal action. The Government indicates in its report of September 2011 that cases against Mapuche individuals for terrorist crimes have been reclassified in order to be considered as ordinary crimes. Furthermore, detailed information was provided on some of the proceedings against Mapuche individuals. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated information in its next report on the cases that are being tried in which there are still Mapuche defendants. Taking into account the concern expressed by indigenous organizations, the Committee invites the Government to indicate the measures adopted to prevent the use of force or coercion in violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the peoples concerned.

Article 1. Self-identification. The Committee notes that in the CUT's comments two communities were identified which indicated that they are not taken into consideration in the national legislation: a coastal community in the North, known as the Changa people; and another coastal and fishing community in the Lakes and Aysén regions, known as the Chono people. The Huilliche and Pehuenche communities have also called for recognition as distinct peoples. The CUT forwarded a document by an ancestral Mapuche Huilliche organization in the Rios and Lakes regions. The Committee also notes the documentation prepared by the General Council of Huilliche Chiefs from Chiloé, forwarded by CONAPAN, which describes itself as an ancestral organization representing the historical continuity of former caciques. The General Council represents around 5,000 families organized into communities, divided into five communes in the province of Chiloé (the Lakes region). The General Council calls for them to be granted legal recognition so as to be able to ensure the application of the provisions of the Convention in relation to consultation and participation, land, health and education. The Committee invites the Government to indicate the measures adopted so that all the groups of the national population referred to in the communications received from indigenous organizations are protected by measures to give effect to the provisions of Articles 6 and 7 (consultation and participation), 14 (land), 25 (health), and 26 and 27 (education), of the Convention.

Articles 2 and 33. Coordinated and systematic action with the participation of indigenous peoples. New State institutions for indigenous peoples. The Government indicates that in the context of the dialogue process initiated in September 2010, the President of the Republic received a report in June 2011 on the progress made in the process which involved over 1,800 persons and that 49 dialogue forums were established. According to the information provided by the Government, the indigenous representatives expressed concern with regard to representativity, access to basic services and connectivity, development, education, culture and the regularization of land rights. In November 2011, the Government indicated that it was proposed to hold discussions on the new institutions. The stages of “the consultations on consultation”, the consultation for the drafting of the regulation of the right to consultation, were determined in the framework of the National Council of the National Indigenous Development Corporation (CONADI). The Government had proposed to continue developing the new institutional system, replacing CONADI by an Indigenous Development Agency and establishing a new indigenous representation body, the Indigenous Peoples’ Council. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the outcome of the consultations on indigenous institutions and the manner in which indigenous peoples’ concerns and priorities were taken into account. The Committee requests the Government to provide precise information on the manner in which the effective participation of indigenous peoples is ensured in the institutions administering programmes affecting them, as required by Article 33 of the Convention.

Articles 6 and 7. Consultation and participation. New legislation. The Government indicates that it took into account the recommendations contained in the general observation made by the Committee of Experts in 2010 on the obligation of consultation when planning the consultations on indigenous institutions. The Committee also notes the exchanges with the Office on the manner of ensuring that the consultations amount to authentic dialogue so that the indigenous peoples can influence their outcome. The Government included in its reports documentation explaining the consultation process, which is also available on the website of the CONADI. In its report received in September 2011, the Government conveys the concern of a group of indigenous leaders who criticize the fact that various highly complex matters are subject to consultations at the same time within a period that they consider inadequate. Furthermore, criticisms were made in the Senate and Chamber of Deputies of the fact that the consultation process appears to be based on Supreme Decree No. 124 of 2009, and not on the Convention. In November 2011, the Government reiterated its intention to repeal Supreme Decree No. 124 of September 2009, which established consultation and participation machinery, and replace it by a new text agreed upon with the representative institutions of indigenous peoples. The CUT recalled that the adoption of Supreme Decree No. 124 was opposed by the Mapuche organizations on the grounds that it was in violation of the essential content of the Convention. The alternative report prepared by the Aymara people also rejected Supreme Decree No. 124. The Committee notes the concerns expressed by the CONAPACH that Supreme Decree No. 124 establishes a mechanism intended to gather the views of indigenous peoples and not to allow dialogue in good faith intended to achieve the consent of those affected by the proposed measures. In the same way as the other indigenous organizations, the alternative report of the Aymara people emphasizes that Supreme Decree No. 124 excludes certain key public bodies from, and restricts the scope of consultations, as it does not promote a process of dialogue in which indigenous peoples can really exercise influence. The CUT also emphasizes the exclusion of certain State bodies from the obligation of consultation and calls for all investment projects that may affect indigenous rights, whether or not in indigenous lands, to be subject to consultation. In September 2012, the Government forwarded its proposal for “legislation on indigenous consultation and participation”, with a view to developing provisions that enjoy consensus to replace Supreme Decree No. 124. The proposed text lays down the principles and a consultation procedure in order to give effect to Article 6(1)(a) and (2) of the Convention, and the Committee notes that it refers to the resettlement of indigenous communities and the significant deterioration of natural resources on which indigenous communities depend. In the reports received in September and October 2012, the Government listed 18 consultations held since March 2010, with five consultation processes being conducted until August 2012 and six planned in the near future. A major national meeting of indigenous representatives has been convened in Santiago in November–December 2012 to review the work carried out by each of the peoples and agree upon a common proposal with the Government. The Committee notes that the Government’s proposal is being discussed in three indigenous languages (Mapuzungun – the Mapuche people, Aymaran and Rapa Nui). The Committee invites the Government to include indications in its next report on the outcome of the efforts made for the adoption of legislation supported by consensus to replace Supreme Decree No. 124. The Committee hopes that the new text will ensure the effective participation of indigenous peoples in decisions which may affect them directly and will give full effect to the corresponding provisions of Articles 6, 7, 15 and 16 of the Convention.

Article 7. Participation. Process of development. In reply to its 2010 comments, the Government indicates that the regional indigenous forums are fundamental bodies for dialogue and participation. The Government indicated that in regions in which indigenous development areas (ADIs) exist, the ADI participation forums should also fulfil the role of regional forums so as not to create parallel institutions. The CUT indicates that the regional indigenous forums have been criticized by indigenous organizations due to the lack of a decision-making body for policies intended for local indigenous peoples. The forums do not have a budget and on many occasions have been dependent on the convocational capacity of the regional authority on which they are dependent, and no regular evaluation is carried out of their activities. Certain forums are not operational. With regard to indigenous development areas, the CUT endorses the criticisms by various indigenous peoples concerning the lack of coordination among public institutions as a basis for developing special policies for such territories. In accordance with the concerns expressed by the CUT, the ADIs practically have not functioned. The CONAPACH expresses its concern at the institutional barriers which limit the political participation of indigenous peoples. It regrets the lack of political will to promote the participation of indigenous peoples in the elected State bodies in which decisions are taken, in the absence of special measures to promote the participation of indigenous peoples or the removal of the institutional obstacles identified in national law and practice in relation to elections and political parties. The Committee invites the Government to include detailed information in its next report on the impact of the consultations that are being held in guaranteeing the participation of indigenous peoples in the formulation, application and evaluation of plans and programmes which may affect them directly. Please include information on the budgetary resources available to the State and the regions to ensure the participation of indigenous peoples in development programmes and for all the other measures provided for in Article 7.

Environmental impact studies. The Committee noted in its direct request in 2010 that the participation by citizens envisaged in Act No. 19300 of March 1994 and its implementing regulations published in December 2002 does not establish a specific requirement for consultation of indigenous peoples that ensures, in accordance with Article 7(3) of the Convention, that studies to assess the social, spiritual, cultural and environmental impact of development activities are carried out in cooperation with indigenous peoples. In the reply received in September 2011, the Government indicated that Act No. 19300 had been amended substantially by Act No. 20417, which entered into force in January 2010. The Committee notes that Act No. 20417 established the Ministry of the Environment, the Environmental Assessment Service and the Environmental Supervisory Service. The Committee observes that the indigenous peoples, in the same way as the Aymara in their alternative report, indicated that sectoral legislation offers less protection than the Convention. In this respect, the Committee notes the rulings of the Supreme Court forwarded by the Government concerning the appeals for environmental protection lodged by indigenous organizations. The CONAPACH also provides decisions resulting from legal action taken by indigenous communities with the support of various NGOs and containing rulings invalidating decisions by State bodies on the grounds that consultations had not been held in accordance with the Convention. The alternative report of the Aymara people refers to other court decisions setting aside appeals for the protection of rights without ruling on the scope of the right to consultation established in the Convention, particularly in relation to studies affecting the province of Parinacota. In October 2012, the Government provided the final report on the process of indigenous consultation on the Regulations on the Environmental Impact Assessment System (SEIA) and the guidelines on the procedures for citizens' participation and support for the assessment of significant deterioration affecting original peoples. A Ministerial Sustainability Council approved, on 28 May 2012, the draft regulations of the SEIA. The Government also stated that the provisions of the new Regulations provide for "a good faith consultation process" and the possibility, in specific circumstances, for indigenous peoples to be able to contribute to the process of environmental assessment. Furthermore, on 21 November 2012, the Government transmitted to the Office a copy of the SEIA Regulations sent to the Office of the Comptroller General of the Republic. The Committee also notes that certain indigenous organizations lodged an appeal for the protection of their rights on 27 June 2012 with the Court of Appeal of Santiago against the Ministerial Sustainability Council in relation to its decision to approve the Regulations of the SEIA, alleging the failure to hold consultations and the inadequacy of the proposed text in terms of the Convention. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the outcome of the appeal for the protection of the rights of certain indigenous organizations lodged against the Regulations of the SEIA. The Committee hopes that the text of the regulations that ensure effect is given to the requirements of consultation, participation and cooperation with indigenous peoples set out in Articles 6 and 7 of the Convention will be provided with the next report. In the event that an environmental impact study involves the prospection or exploitation of resources in indigenous lands and/or the resettlement of indigenous communities, the Committee invites the Government to indicate how compliance is ensured with all the provisions of Articles 15 and 16 of the Convention.

Lands. The Government indicates that the request for the regularization of land titles, greater flexibility in land boundaries and the purchase of land are among the principal matters raised in June 2011 in the context of the dialogue forum for a historical compromise. The Committee notes the activities undertaken by CONADI in the framework of Act No. 19253 and the legislation in force respecting land. In its alternative report, among other matters relating to Article 7 of the Convention, the Aymara people regrets that the proceedings in CONADI prevented the regularization of land titles in the province of Parinacota. Not all the persons concerned are able to regularize their land as they do not have the necessary financial resources. The CONAPACH also places emphasis on the case of the ancestral lands of the communities of the Atacameño, Aymara and Quechua peoples in the north of the country. The CUT recalls the work undertaken in 2003 in the framework of the Historical Truth and New Treatment Commission, which made recommendations concerning lands which were intended to strengthen the protection of indigenous lands, including the demarcation, titularization and protection of the lands over which ancestral indigenous ownership was demonstrated. With reference to Article 14(3) of the Convention, the Historical Truth and New Treatment Commission proposed the establishment of expeditious and low-cost legal procedures to resolve land claims by the persons or communities concerned. It expressed the conviction that the existence of efficient and effective machinery to process land claims would prevent claims being made through informal channels. The CONAPACH recalled the comments of the Committee of Experts concerning the obligation of countries which have ratified the Convention to establish machinery to recognize ownership based on traditional occupation. The CONAPACH also emphasized the conclusions and recommendations on lands and territorial rights of the UN Special Rapporteur submitted to the Human Rights Council following a working visit in April 2009. In his recommendations (paragraphs 53 and 54 of document A/HRC/12/34/Add.6, 5 October 2009), the UN Special Rapporteur referred to the Convention and supported the call for the establishment of effective machinery for the recognition of the land rights of indigenous peoples based on occupation and traditional or ancestral use. In view of the persistence of a situation that is not in compliance with the Convention, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to report in detail on the compliance with the Convention of the procedures for the regularization of land title and the settlement of disputes. The Committee hopes to be able to examine information showing that account has been taken of the concerns expressed by trade unions and organizations of indigenous peoples in the comments made in 2010 and that the right to land ownership and possession set out in Articles 13 and 14 of the Convention is recognized for indigenous peoples.

Natural resources. In its comments in 2010, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to align the national legislation with the Convention so that indigenous peoples are consulted on investment projects likely to affect them directly and so that they can participate in the benefits deriving from the exploitation of mineral resources. The Committee observed previously that the Mining Code, the Act on geothermal energy concessions and the Water Code do not contain provisions on the consultation of indigenous peoples concerning investment projects that involve concessions for use or development. The alternative report prepared by the Aymara people indicates that when the Convention was ratified there was no adjustment of sectoral legislation. The alternative report provided by CONAPACH describes specific cases in which there appears to be a loss of rights by the indigenous Atacameña, Quechua and Aymara communities over water resources in the river Loa and other water and geothermal resources in the north of the country. In the same way as CONAPACH, CONAPAN also refers to the negative impact of mining projects in Diaguita Huascoaltino territory and the establishment of water rights in Mapuche territories by hydroelectric companies, without a determination of whether the interests of indigenous peoples have been prejudiced. In the reply received in September 2011, the Government referred to the development of the consultation process on indigenous institutions. The Committee notes the further indications provided by the Government in September and October 2012 on the attempts made to develop new institutions and to formulate Regulations on the SEIA. The Committee once again recalls the need to give full effect to Article 15 of the Convention, which sets out the conditions for prior consultation procedures and for participation in benefits by the peoples concerned. The Committee once again requests the Government to amend the national legislation so as to ensure that indigenous peoples are consulted before any programme is undertaken or authorized for the prospection or exploitation of resources on their lands and are able to participate in the benefits deriving from the exploitation of natural resources. The Committee hopes to be able to examine specific information showing that the rights of indigenous peoples to natural resources have been safeguarded, as set out in the Convention.

Health. Education. Cross-border contacts and cooperation. The Committee notes the concern expressed by the Pelón Xaru Mapuche Nation Peoples Culture Centre on the need for greater government support so that machis (traditional Mapuche doctors) can carry out their work under optimal conditions. The urban Mapuche organizations also made calls for access to indigenous health and education. The alternative report of the Aymara people raises issues relating to the right to education and cross-border cooperation. In the same way as the other documentation provided by the CONAPAN, an ancestral Huilliche Mapuche organization emphasizes the need to ensure that persons exercising educational functions in the formal school context are trained in their indigenous communities. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated information in its report so that it can examine the manner in which progress has been made in the application of each of the provisions of Parts V, VI and VII of the Convention.

Colombia

The Committee notes the Government's report received in August 2012, which contains detailed information in reply to its observation of 2011. The Committee also notes the Government's reply received in February 2012 to the observations made by the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) in October 2011. In addition, the Government sent a report in September 2012 containing a detailed reply to the issues raised by the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT) in March 2012. The Committee also noted the observations made by the National Employers' Association of Colombia (ANDI) in September 2012, which received the support of the IOE; and the new observations from the CUT received in August 2012.

Communication from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE). In its report of August 2012 the Government indicates that it shares the concern expressed by the IOE in its communication of October 2011, regarding the fact that many aspects of the Convention are not reflected in the world of work. The Government states that such aspects are the responsibility of another government department, the Ministry of the Interior, which implies a more substantial commitment on the part of the State. The Committee notes that the Government understands that the obligations of the Convention are addressed to States and that the Government formulates its public policy accordingly. The Government states that companies must comply with the legislation which is adopted to give effect to the Convention. Recognizing the concern of the IOE in the report received in August 2012, the Government highlights the case law of the Constitutional Court, which has affirmed emphatically that the obligation to hold prior consultations arises in connection with those measures that can directly affect ethnic communities. The Government mentions Ruling No. C-366/11, issued on 11 May 2011, whereby the Constitutional Court decided to postpone by two years the declaration of unconstitutionality of Act No. 1382 of 2010 through which the Mining Code had been amended. The Committee invites the Government, when preparing its next report, to hold consultations with the social partners and indigenous organizations on the subjects referred to in the present observation and to include information on the results achieved by the measures adopted to give effect to each of the provisions of the Convention (Parts VII and VIII of the report form).

The Committee notes that the IOE has submitted observations in August 2012 on the application in law and practice of Articles 6, 7, 15 and 16 of the Convention concerning the requirement of consultation. In this regard, the IOE raises the following issues: the identification of representative institutions, the definition of indigenous territory and the lack of consensus of indigenous and tribal peoples, and the importance for the Committee to be aware of the consequences of the issue in relation to legal security, financial costs and certainty of both public and private investment. The IOE refers to the difficulties, costs and negative impact that the failure by States to comply with the obligation of consultation can have on the projects undertaken by both public and private enterprises. Among other effects, the IOE observed that the erroneous application and interpretation of the requirement of prior consultation can be a legal obstacle and lead to business difficulties, harm the reputation of enterprises and result in financial costs. The IOE also states that the difficulties to comply with the obligation of consultation may have an impact on the projects that enterprises may wish to carry out with a view to creating a conducive environment for economic and social development, the creation of decent and productive work and the sustainable development of society as a whole. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report any comments that it deems appropriate on the observations made by the IOE.

Article 2 of the Convention. Coordinated and systematic action to protect the physical, social, cultural, economic and political integrity of indigenous and Afro-Colombian communities. In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government indicates in its report received in August 2012 that pursuant to Decree No. 4912 of 26 December 2011, a prevention and protection programme was organized with a differential approach aimed at ethnic protection. The Committee notes that a special mechanism was defined for the protection of the territorial rights of ethnic groups which had been violated through violence and/or the negative impact of construction and/or operation of economic mega-projects involving monocultures, mining exploitation, tourism and dock work. Furthermore, following the instructions issued by the Constitutional Court in Order No. 004 of January 2009, the Ministry of the Interior also drew up a roadmap for the formulation of an ethnic protection plan. The Committee notes the summary chart indicating the status of the processes for the protection of each of the 34 indigenous peoples identified. The Committee observes that it already referred in previous comments to some of the difficulties experienced by indigenous peoples in relation to the Convention. The Committee invites the Government to include up-to-date information in its next report on the progress achieved in relation to the processes under way for the ethnic protection of the 34 identified indigenous peoples. The Government is also requested to send a copy of the publication mentioned in the report, namely the "Guide to the implementation of the preventive policy of the Public Prosecutor's Office, in relation to the rights of ethnic groups, for the protection of the fundamental right to free and informed prior consultation", published in April 2011.

Article 3. Human rights. In its previous comments the Committee welcomed the adoption of Act No. 1448 of June 2011 concerning compensation for victims and restitution of lands, the aim of which is to compensate the victims of armed conflict. In the communication received in March 2012, the CUT states that there was no prior consultation with the Black, Afro-Colombian, Palenquero and Raizal communities. The CUT reports on the meetings held between community representatives and the government authorities with a view to avoiding the unconstitutional nature of the decree intended to handle, compensate and restore the rights of victims. The Committee notes the detailed information sent by the Government in August and September 2012, in which it describes the process followed during 2011 up to the adoption of Legislative Decree No. 4633 of 3 December 2011, issuing measures for assistance, care, full reparation and restitution of territorial rights to victims belonging to indigenous peoples and communities. The Government indicates that plans for full collective reparation will be adopted with the participation of representatives of the communities. The Committee invites the Government to include information in its next report on the implementation of the plans for full collective reparation provided for in Legislative Decree No. 4633 (including for the Black, Afro-Colombian, Palenquero and Raizal communities), the participation of representatives of all the communities and the manner in which these measures have contributed towards restoring the rights established in the Convention.

Protection of fundamental rights and physical restitution of collective territories. Afro-Colombian communities of the Curvaradó and Jiguamiandó river basins (department of Chocó). In the comments that it has been making for many years, with reference to the various statements made by different trade union organizations, the Committee expressed its concern at the problems and serious deficiencies relating to the application of the Convention faced by the abovementioned Afro-Colombian communities. In the report received in August 2012, the Government indicates that the State is endeavouring to improve the situation regarding protection of the Jiguamiandó. Attached to the Government's report is comprehensive documentation on the policy and security measures for the Jiguamiandó and Curvaradó communities. In a communication received in August 2012, the CUT refers to Order No. A-045 of 7 March 2012 issued by the Special Chamber for Enforcement of Ruling No. T-025 of 2004 and the instructions issued in its compliance orders of 2009 and 2010. In view of the serious situation, the Constitutional Court is calling for the adoption of new urgent protection measures and the establishment of a clear timetable of work to ensure full compliance with all the orders issued. The CUT also refers in its communication to recent studies by the National Indigenous Organization of Colombia (ONIC), which indicated that the worst affected ethnic groups in the first six months of 2012 were the Nasa-Paéz (17 murders), Emberá (15 murders) and Awa (five murders). According to these studies, a total of 54 indigenous persons were killed especially in the region of Cauca (26 per cent of all murders), while each of the departments of Nariño and Risaralda accounted for nearly 15 per cent of the killings. Indigenous peoples in the south and south-east of the country have been affected by the internal armed conflict between the armed forces and guerrilla groups and more recently paramilitary groups, drug traffickers and criminal gangs. The ANDI also establishes a direct link between the violence affecting indigenous communities and the actions of drug trafficking and of illegal armed groups on their territories. The ANDI states that the Government is taking action to prevent acts of violence and is constantly endeavouring to preserve the lives and customs of indigenous peoples. The Committee reiterates its concern about the persistence of a grave situation and invites the Government to include information in its next report on the efforts made and the results of the measures adopted to ensure the protection of the physical, social, cultural, economic and political integrity of indigenous and Afro-Colombian communities. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to take the necessary steps to protect the communities victims of violence, to ensure that all reported occurrences of murders and violence are investigated and that the perpetrators are brought to justice.

Article 6. Legislation on consultation. In the reports received in August and September 2012, the Government states that preliminary draft legislation concerning the right to consultation has been prepared with a view to being revised at a high-level meeting. As regards the Bill concerning indigenous territorial entities, negotiations are also continuing with contributions having been received from the Organization of Indigenous Peoples of Colombian Amazonia (OPIAC) and another from the ONIC. The Government also provides information on the Bill concerning lands and rural development. Furthermore, in May 2012, a new royalty regime and its prior consultation process were declared constitutional, by judgment C-317-2012 of the Constitutional Court. In its contribution of August 2012, the ANDI recalls that the obligation of consultation has the rank of a fundamental right and is therefore protected by tutela law (constitutional guarantees). The Directorate for Prior Consultation of the Under-Ministry for Participation and Equal Rights at the Ministry of the Interior has a group of 66 professionals for analysing the economic, environmental, social and cultural impact which may be suffered by an ethnic group – indigenous, Roma or minority (Black, Afro-Colombian, Raizal or Palenquero) – by the exploitation of natural resources within its territory. The Committee invites the Government to include up-to-date information in next report on:

- (i) the preparation of the draft legislation regulating prior consultation and the consultations actually held in this regard with the indigenous peoples concerned;
- (ii) any developments in the consultation processes conducted with indigenous peoples and the approval of the draft legislation mentioned in previous comments (on a regional environmental council, rural development, access to genetic resources and related traditional knowledge, indigenous territorial entities); and
- (iii) the measures to follow up on the institutionalization of the prior consultation mechanism in the National Development Plan 2010–14 with ethnic groups and the participation in that mechanism of the indigenous peoples concerned.

Article 15. Consultation before undertaking or authorizing any programme for the exploration or exploitation of existing resources on indigenous territories. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government stating that the Directorate for Prior Consultation had held, in 2011, 66 consultations throughout the national territory. The Government has ensured that the presence of communities on the land concerned is certified within 15 days where no verification is required and within 45 days where verification is required on the land concerned. In 2011, a total of 20,128 certificates were issued for the equivalent number of projects. The consultation processes take no longer than six months. In 2011, a total of 279 consultations were recorded for a total of 703 communities; 397 certificates were issued during the first half of 2012. The Committee invites the Government to include up-to-date information in its next report on the consultations held with a view to authorizing programmes for the exploitation of existing resources. Please indicate the manner in which it is ensured that the indigenous communities concerned participate in the benefits of such activities, in accordance with Article 15(2) of the Convention.

Consultation on exploration and exploitation projects in the Chidima reservation (department of Chocó). Mandé Norte project (departments of Antioquia and Chocó). In the communication transmitted to the Government in October 2011, the IOE had explicitly expressed its rejection of the request made by the Committee in the observation formulated in 2009 to suspend the exploitation and exploration of natural resources until consultations of the indigenous peoples who live in the Pescadito and Chidima reservations and in the Uranda Jiguamiandó reservation are held. In its reply to IOE's comments, the Government indicated in February of 2012, its intention to comply with the orders of the Constitutional Court in paragraph 7 of the operative section of tutela Ruling No. T-129 of 3 March 2011. The Constitutional Court ordered the Ministry of the Interior and the Ministry of Justice, the Colombian Geological Service (Ingeominas), the Autonomous Regional Corporation of Chocó and the Ministry of the Environment, Housing and Territorial Development to suspend all mining exploration or similar activities, whether legal or illegal, which are being conducted or promoted under concession contracts concluded with any person who might thus affect the Emberá Katio indigenous communities on the Chidima and Pescadito reserves, until such time as the prior consultation process and the search for informed consent from the ethnic communities involved are exhausted. The Committee notes the information sent by the Government concerning the meetings held with a view to creating a rapprochement with the communities concerned. The Committee further notes the statement by the Directorate for Prior Consultation at the Ministry of the Interior that it intends to ensure that each consultation process constitutes an opportunity for the groups concerned to participate in an appropriate, efficient and effective manner in the projects, works or activities which, with their full and informed consent, are due to be undertaken on their ancestral territories. The Committee invites the Government to include information in its next report on the implementation of the orders issued under Constitutional Court tutela Ruling No. T-129 of March 2011 concerning the Chidima and Pescadito reserves. The Committee also invites the Government to include information on the follow-up given to Ruling No. T-769/09 of 29 October 2009, whereby the Constitutional Court granted protection of the right to prior consultation to the communities affected by a licence awarded as part of the Mandé Norte project for mining exploration and exploitation in the departments of Antioquia and Chocó.

Other disputes relating to mining resources. The Committee notes the communication from the CUT received in March 2012 and the Government's reply received in September 2012, referring to the situation created in March 2006 as a result of lack of consultation when a licence for mining exploitation was granted for the extraction of gold from a rural plot with a surface area of some 99 hectares located in the corregimiento (administrative subdivision) of La Toma in the municipality of Suárez (department of Cauca). The CUT referred to Constitutional Court Ruling No. T-1045A/10 of 14 October 2010 issued in tutela proceedings initiated by the La Toma community council. The Constitutional Court reiterated its jurisprudence in relation to the scope and requirements of the form of prior consultation. The Constitutional Court, among other things, ordered the Ministry of the Interior to conduct, guarantee and coordinate prior consultation and ordered the suspension of mining exploitation activities. The Government indicates in its reply that for reasons of public order it has not been possible to continue with consultations in La Toma. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would provide information in its next report which will enable the Committee to examine the manner in which the rights of consultation and participation provided for in the Convention in cases of exploration and exploitation of natural resources in territories occupied by Afro-Colombian communities have been re-established. The Committee invites the Government to refer to the other disputes mentioned in previous comments and include up-to-date information on any further developments in its next report.

Representativeness. In relation to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information included by the Government in the report received in August 2012 stating that, in the event of any dispute concerning the representativeness of indigenous leaders, it would be the Standing Committee on Consultation which would settle such disputes since this is the national body for consultation in which representatives of indigenous organizations participate. The election processes within the indigenous communities are conducted in accordance with the customs and practices of the communities concerned.

Guatemala

The Committee notes the Government's reports received in December 2011 and September 2012, containing additional information concerning certain of the matters examined in its previous comments. The Coordinating Committee of Agricultural, Commercial, Industrial and Financial Associations (CACIF) also provided its observations in August 2012 on the project for the construction of a cement plant in the municipality of San Juan Sacatepéquez (department of Guatemala) and the exploitation of mining resources in the Marlin mine located in San Miguel Ixtahuacán (department of San Marcos). The International Organisation of Employers (IOE) expressed support for the observations made by the CACIF.

Communication from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE). The Committee notes that the IOE has submitted observations in August 2012 on the application in law and practice of Articles 6, 7, 15 and 16 of the Convention concerning the requirement of consultation. In this regard, the IOE raises the following issues: the identification of representative institutions, the definition of indigenous territory and the lack of consensus of indigenous and tribal peoples, and the importance for the Committee to be aware of the consequences of the issue in relation to legal security, financial costs and certainty of both public and private investment. The IOE refers to the difficulties, costs and negative impact that the failure by States to comply with the obligation of consultation can have on the projects undertaken by both public and private enterprises. Among other effects, the IOE observed that the erroneous application and interpretation of the requirement of prior consultation can be a legal obstacle and lead to business difficulties, harm the reputation of enterprises and result in financial costs. The IOE also states that the difficulties to comply with the obligation of consultation may have an impact on the projects that enterprises may wish to carry out with a view to creating a conducive environment for economic and social development, the creation of decent and productive work and the sustainable development of society as a whole. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report any comments that it deems appropriate on the observations made by the IOE.

Communication from the Trade Union Confederation of Guatemala (UNSITRAGUA), the General Confederation of Workers of Guatemala (CGTG) and the Trade Unions' Unity of Guatemala (CUSG). Alternative report prepared by the Council of Mayan Organizations of Guatemala (COMG). In September 2012, the Office forwarded to the Government a communication from the three trade unions containing general observations on the application of the Convention, and particularly the lack of regulation of the right to consultation and the pending legislative amendments on mining and environmental health. In addition, the Office also received, on 4 December 2012, a communication by the Central Confederation of Rural and Urban Workers (CCTCC) submitting an alternative report prepared by the Council of Mayan Organizations of Guatemala (COMG). Among other issues related to the application of the Convention, the alternative report evoked the events that took place on 4 October 2012 in Totonicapan which resulted in the deaths of eight and the injuries of 35 indigenous peoples. The Committee asks the Government to include in its report detailed information on the measures taken to investigate the events that occurred in Totonicapan. Please also include detailed information on the measures taken to ensure observance of the Convention in the situations submitted by the social partners and the indigenous people's organizations (Parts VII and VIII of the report form).

Appropriate consultation and participation machinery. In the report received in December 2011, with reference to the comments that have been made for many years on the right to consultation, the Government forwarded the decision of the Constitutional Court of 24 November 2011 on Case No. 1072-2011 requesting the President of the Republic to reopen the initiative for the regulation of consultation with indigenous peoples through appropriate means to ensure that consultation is held with the due participation of the indigenous peoples. The Committee notes that the Constitutional Court referred to its ruling of 21 December 2009 on Case No. 3878-2007, in which it placed emphasis on the effective right to consultation established in the Convention and recalled that the System of Development Councils (Decree No. 11-2002, which provisionally regulates consultation) offers a structure which continues to "ensure the presence of community representatives in general and, specifically, of representatives of indigenous peoples from the various regions of the country, both elected according to their own principles, values, usages and customs". The Committee recalls that the Office is offering technical assistance to all the parties concerned to facilitate the establishment of appropriate consultation and participation machinery, as required by Articles 6, 7 and 15 of the Convention. Under these conditions, the Committee refers to its previous comments and:

- (i) requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the measures adopted to establish appropriate consultation and participation machinery in accordance with the Convention, taking into account its general observation of 2010;
- (ii) reiterates its request to the Government to ensure that indigenous peoples are consulted and can participate in an appropriate manner, through their representative institutions, in the establishment of this machinery in such a way as to be able to express their opinions and influence the final outcome;
- (iii) requests all the parties concerned to do their utmost to participate in good faith in the above process, with a view to pursuing a constructive dialogue that enables positive results to be achieved;
- (iv) observing that section 26 of the Act respecting urban and rural development councils provides for provisional consultation machinery with indigenous peoples pending settlement of the issue at the national level, invites the Government to provide information on the use of that provisional machinery and on the application in practice of section 26 of the Act; and
- (v) requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the existing legislation, including the Mining Act, into conformity with the Convention.

Project for the construction of a cement plant in the municipality of San Juan Sacatepéquez (department of Guatemala). The Committee notes the illustrative documentation provided by the Government and the CACIF on developments in the situation in the municipality of San Juan Sacatepéquez in 2011 and 2012. The municipality is located some 31 kilometres to the north east of the City of Guatemala and is composed of municipal township, 20 small villages and 56 groups of houses. Most of the inhabitants are Maya Kaqchikeles. In a special report by the Human Rights Ombudsman, published in December 2011, the principal problems are outlined which make the situation in San Juan Sacatepéquez "an illustrative case of violence, criminality and violations of human rights". In his conclusions and recommendation, the Human Rights Ombudsman emphasizes that in San Juan Sacatepéquez the State lost the monopoly of the legitimate use of force and the control of large areas of the municipality, which passed into the hands of clandestine and illegal security groups. The Government therefore indicates in its report that the violence in San Juan Sacatepéquez emerged prior to the plans to locate a cement plant there and is not a consequence of the project, and has its origins in various separate causes which the State has identified and is endeavouring to resolve. In a Government document prepared by the Standing National Dialogue System (SNDP), dated December 2011, reference is also made to the violence in San Juan Sacatepéquez results from the electoral process and from certain external actors. The Committee notes the communication provided by the Government in which the Association of Kaqchikeles Communities of San Juan Qamolo Qi' sent to the Ambassador of Germany in Guatemala in August 2011 recalling the violence suffered since 2006, including the murder of community leaders and other very serious forms of ill-treatment. Referring to the earlier recommendations of the Committee of Experts, the Association of Kaqchikeles Communities of San Juan requested the Ambassador of Germany to use his good offices to assess once again, with the participation of the Kaqchikeles peoples of San Juan Sacatepéquez, the social, spiritual and cultural impact on the environment that will be caused by the mining activities and the extent to which the interests of the indigenous peoples would be affected, in accordance with Articles 7 and 15 of the Convention. The Committee notes the documentation on the preparation of a system to address disputes through awareness-raising workshops on non-violent communication, which were held in 2011 with the participation of the various parties concerned. The Government also included information from the support programme for the National Peace and Reconciliation Process and the German technical cooperation agency (GTZ) in Guatemala. The CACIF indicates that the dialogue process has succeeded in creating confidence in the context of constructive communication. The Committee notes the replies to the questions raised by community leaders in San Juan by the enterprise Cementos Progreso SA, including various proposals and suggestions for guarantees and verification by national and international authorities. Under these circumstances, the Committee hopes that all the parties involved will continue their efforts to engage in constructive dialogue through machinery in which they have confidence. The Committee invites the Government to provide updated information in its next report on the progress made in good faith negotiations, in accordance with Articles 6, 7 and 15 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government:

- (i) to indicate in its next report how the solutions found for the establishment of the cement factory in San Juan Sacatepéquez have taken into account the interests and priorities of the Maya Kaqchikeles Communities residing in the area;
- (ii) to ensure that the project for the establishment of the cement factory in San Juan Sacatepéquez does not have harmful effects on the health, culture and property of the Maya Kaqchikeles Communities residing in the area and draws the Government's attention to paragraphs 3 and 4 of Article 7 of the Convention; and
- (iii) to take the necessary measures to guarantee the integrity of the persons and property affected by the cement factory project and to ensure that all the parties concerned refrain from any acts of intimidation or violence against persons who do not share their views on the project.

Exploitation of the Marlin mine in San Miguel Ixtahuacán (department of San Marcos). The Committee notes the updated information provided by the Government and the CACIF on the exploitation of resources through mining by the company Montana Exploradora de Guatemala SA in a mine located in the vicinity of San Miguel Ixtahuacán. The Committee also recalls that the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR), in Decision No. MC 260/07 of 20 May 2010, imposed protective measures and requested the State of Guatemala to suspend mining operations in the Marlin I project and other activities connected with the licence awarded to Goldcorp/Montana Exploradora de Guatemala SA. The IACHR also requested the State to take effective measures to prevent environmental pollution pending the adoption of a decision on the substance of the petition related to the application for protective measures. The Committee observes that according to the information provided by the Government in its report and CACIF, mining exploitation activities have continued. The Ministry of the Environment and Natural Resources indicates that water monitoring is adequate and national and international standards are taken into consideration. Approximately 99 per cent of the water is recycled by means of a closed circuit as part of a responsible mining process. According to the information received, in June 2011, a permanent care centre was inaugurated and days were organized for vaccination and the training of midwives for the benefit of the local population. The company also offered training and educational and sporting infrastructure. The company maintains a road network of 108 kilometres which benefits the whole of the department. The company has become one of the principal contributors to the national economy, as royalties have been paid to the central Government and to the municipalities of San Miguel and Sipacapa. Moreover, the company is reported to have made an additional contribution of voluntary royalties of 4 per cent in accordance with the framework agreement for the provision of voluntary royalties concluded by the Association of Mining Industries in January 2012. The Committee refers to its previous comments and requests the Government to provide updated information in its next report on the consultations and participation required by Article 15 of the Convention in relation to the authorization of the exploitation programmes of the company Montana Exploradora de Guatemala SA for existing mining resources.

Northern Transversal Strip project. Other territorial development projects. In its observation in 2011, the Committee noted the comments made by the Indigenous and Rural Workers Trade Union Movement of Guatemala (MSICG) concerning the lack of consultation of the indigenous peoples concerned in relation to the project for the construction of the Northern Transversal Strip, which involves the construction of a road network of 362 kilometres in the departments of Izabal, Alta Verapaz, Quiché and Huehuetenango. The information provided by the Government in August 2012 included documentation from the Subsecretariat of Territorial Planning and Development concerning a master plan for the central subregion. A document of the Ministry of Communications, Infrastructure and Housing on the development of a strategy to create a "micro-region" was also provided. With regard to infrastructure projects, the Committee requests the Government, in the report due in 2013, to include information enabling it to examine in detail the manner in which it has been ensured that indigenous peoples are consulted on each occasion that legislative or administrative measures which may affect them directly are under consideration (Article 6 of the Convention).

The Committee invites the Government, when preparing the report due in 2013, to consult the social partners and indigenous organizations on the measures taken to give effect to the Convention. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide a report in 2013 containing specific information on the other matters raised in the observation and direct request made in 2011 and on the results achieved by the measures adopted to give effect to each of the provisions of the Convention.

Honduras

Protection of the rights of the Misquito people. Conditions of employment, social security and health of Misquito divers. The Committee notes the observations of the Single Confederation of Workers of Honduras (CUTH), sent to the Government in September 2011, and the Government's reply, received in October 2012. The CUTH supplemented its communication with documentation from the Office of the Special Prosecutor for Ethnic Groups and Cultural Heritage, the Fund of the Centre for Justice and International Law and the Inter-American Development Bank. The CUTH expresses concern that diving is undertaken without proper conditions of safety by Misquito fishers, largely in the Department of Gracias a Dios. Misquito divers fishing for crayfish and prawns use old equipment which is not maintained, lack any relevant training and work on average for 12 to 17 hours a day on the high seas, with diving periods of more than five hours. The CUTH indicates that diving in such inadequate conditions has serious health implications, decompression sickness being the most common occupational disease. The CUTH also reports that Misquito divers have no social security cover, and no access to medical treatment or to administrative or judicial remedies. The CUTH emphasizes that the situation of Misquito divers is a clear example of discrimination and vulnerability. These workers should enjoy the protection afforded by the Convention as members of indigenous peoples whose life and integrity is constantly under threat from the consequences of diving for deep water fish and as members of a geographically isolated and historically marginalized indigenous peoples. In its reply, the Government states that all health and education services have been provided for the Misquito indigenous peoples in the Department of Gracias a Dios. The Ministry of Labour and Social Security supplied a diving manual translated into the Misquito language and addresses workers' claims filed in the Puerto Lempira regional office, to which the Misquito people has access. The Committee notes that workers have access to a bilingual (Misquito-Spanish) labour inspector. It also notes that Executive Decree No. PCM-003-2012, published in March 2012, established an inter-institutional committee to address and prevent the problems of dive-fishing. The committee consists of eight government offices and its duties include, coordinating activities in order to deal comprehensively with the problems of dive-fishing and their effects on the family and the community. The Government adds that the Ministry of Labour and Social Security, in the course of reinforcing the General Directorate of Social Welfare, is to appoint labour prosecutors in the regional offices to deal with Misquito workers' claims free of charge and monitor the training of occupational safety and health inspectors.

The Committee recalls that Article 20(4) of the Convention requires particular attention to be paid to the establishment of adequate labour inspection services in areas where workers belonging to the peoples concerned undertake wage employment, in order to ensure compliance with Part III of the Convention. In Article 20(1), the Convention provides for the Government, in cooperation with the peoples concerned, to adopt special measures to ensure the effective protection, with regard to recruitment and conditions of employment, of workers belonging to indigenous peoples. In this regard, education and training programmes may be established for indigenous communities on health and safety measures with respect to diving. The Committee requests the Government to provide more specific information in its next report on the number of Misquito workers engaged in underwater fishing, the inspections carried out and their results. The Committee invites the Government to provide further information on the coverage of Misquito divers by the social security scheme (Article 24) and the availability of adequate health services to treat Misquito divers in the event of occupational accident and disease (Article 25). Please also indicate the manner in which the cooperation of the Misquito people is ensured in the planning and administration of health services (Article 25(2)).

Communication from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE). The Committee notes that the IOE has submitted observations in August 2012 on the application in law and practice of Articles 6, 7, 15 and 16 of the Convention concerning the requirement of consultation. In this regard, the IOE raises the following issues: the identification of representative institutions, the definition of indigenous territory and the lack of consensus of indigenous and tribal peoples, and the importance for the Committee to be aware of the consequences of the issue in relation to legal security, financial costs and certainty of both public and private investment. The IOE refers to the difficulties, costs and negative impact that the failure by States to comply with the obligation of consultation can have on the projects undertaken by both public and private enterprises. Among other effects, the IOE observed that the erroneous application and interpretation of the requirement of prior consultation can be a legal obstacle and lead to business difficulties, harm the reputation of enterprises and result in financial costs. The IOE also states that the difficulties to comply with the obligation of consultation may have an impact on the projects that enterprises may wish to carry out with a view to creating a conducive environment for economic and social development, the creation of decent and productive work and the sustainable development of society as a whole. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report any comments that it deems appropriate on the observations made by the IOE.

Parts VII and VIII of the report form. The Committee invites the Government, in preparing its next report, due in 2013, to consult the social partners and indigenous organizations on the measures taken to give effect to the Convention. It hopes that in 2013 the Government will submit a report containing specific information on the issues raised in the 2008 observation and direct request and on the results obtained by the measures taken to give effect to each provision of the Convention.

Paraguay

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) (ratification: 1993)

The Committee notes the Government's report received in May 2012 and the other information related to the application of the Convention provided in September 2011 in the report for the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29). The Government provided further information in an additional report received in August 2012, containing indications by the Paraguayan Indigenous Institute and the Department of Original Peoples and Well-being of the Secretariat for Children and Young Persons (SNNA). Furthermore, the Single Confederation of Workers – Authentic (CUT–A), which collaborates in the Chaco Indigenous Peoples' Council, provided its comments in August 2012.

Communication from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE). The Committee notes that the IOE has submitted observations in August 2012 on the application in law and practice of Articles 6, 7, 15 and 16 of the Convention concerning the requirement of consultation. In this regard, the IOE raises the following issues: the identification of representative institutions, the definition of indigenous territory and the lack of consensus of indigenous and tribal peoples, and the importance for the Committee to be aware of the consequences of the issue in relation to legal security, financial costs and certainty of both public and private investment. The IOE refers to the difficulties, costs and negative impact that the failure by States to comply with the obligation of consultation can have on the projects undertaken by both public and private enterprises. Among other effects, the IOE observed that the erroneous application and interpretation of the requirement of prior consultation can be a legal obstacle and lead to business difficulties, harm the reputation of enterprises and result in financial costs. The IOE also states that the difficulties to comply with the obligation of consultation may have an impact on the projects that enterprises may wish to carry out with a view to creating a conducive environment for economic and social development, the creation of decent and productive work and the sustainable development of society as a whole. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report any comments that it deems appropriate on the observations made by the IOE.

Part VIII of the report form. The Committee recalls Part VIII of the report form states that: “[a]lthough such action is not required, the Government may find it helpful to consult organizations of indigenous or tribal peoples in the country, through their traditional institutions where they exist, on the measures taken to give effect to the present Convention, and in preparing reports on its application”. The Committee invites the Government, when preparing the report to be submitted in 2013, to communicate with the representative organizations of employers and workers and to consult organizations of indigenous peoples in the country, through their traditional institutions, on the measures taken to give effect to the Convention. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide a report in 2013 containing specific indications on the matters raised in the present observation and on the results achieved through the measures adopted in order to give effect to each of the provisions of the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. Self-identification. The Government confirms the results of the 2008 Indigenous Survey, which indicated that there were around 108,308 indigenous persons in the country. The Government indicates that, taking into account the Committee's recommendations, three identification criteria will be used in the Third National Census: self-identification, language and geographical origin. The Committee notes with interest that the census is planned for August and September 2012, with the theme: “Different, but from the same country”. The increased growth of the indigenous population was the reason for undertaking the Third National Census; self-identification was included in the Third National Census as a criterion to define the indigenous peoples covered by the Convention. New indigenous communities have been formed and a total of 574 indigenous communities have been registered with the Paraguayan Indigenous Institute (INDI), and the legal personality of 435 of them has been recognized. The Government added that in 2012 identity documents were issued for 1,018 indigenous persons living in very remote communities in the Paraguayan Chaco. Through mobile units, documents were issued in communities bordering on the frontiers of the Plurinational State of Bolivia. The Committee invites the Government to include with its next report updated statistical data on the indigenous communities in the country.

Coordinated and systematic action. Prior consultation. The Committee notes Decision No. 2039/2010 of the INDI, dated 11 August 2010, establishing the requirement to seek INDI intervention in all consultation processes in indigenous communities. Decision No. 2039/2010 considers that Convention No. 169 is an instrument of direct application which does not require legislation for compliance to be compulsory. The complaints were taken into account by the INDI that it had received from representatives of indigenous communities concerning activities undertaken without the formalities and requirements set out in the Convention. The INDI will establish on a case by case basis the procedures to be followed for each consultation, depending on the subject of the consultation and on the organization and culture of the community affected. The INDI, which is the body responsible for indigenous policy and for the application of Convention No. 169, will not consider valid any consultation undertaken without its monitoring and evaluation. The Government indicates that the most outstanding outcomes include those relating to the formulation of tourist itineraries in certain indigenous communities. The Committee invites the Government to provide more detailed information in its report on the consultations held by the INDI in accordance with Decision No. 2039/2010. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the effective participation is ensured of indigenous peoples in the INDI and in other institutions administering programmes which affect them (Articles 2 and 33 of the Convention). The Committee also hopes that its next report will contain information on the manner in which Decision No. 2039/2010 has made it possible to ensure appropriate procedures of prior consultation for the effective participation of indigenous peoples in decisions which may affect them directly (Articles 6 and 7 of the Convention).

Article 7. Participation, development projects and the environment. In reply to previous comments, the Government refers to the information provided by the INDI on the direct discussions with indigenous leaders and organizations for the promotion of ethnic development and to promote the participation of indigenous peoples in the various decision-making bodies with a view to guaranteeing their comprehensive development. The Committee invites the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the manner in which it is envisaged that indigenous communities themselves are able to decide their own development priorities. Please indicate whether studies have been undertaken to assess the social, spiritual, cultural and environmental impact of development projects on indigenous peoples and the manner in which the indigenous peoples concerned have participated in such projects.

Articles 8 to 11. Customary law and the administration of justice. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code provides for the possibility of imposing an alternative sentence when such an alternative “complies more effectively with the aims of the Constitution in relation to the cultural identity of the convicted person under conditions more favourable to the latter”. The INDI indicates that it issues opinions on the status of indigenous citizens and the special legislation applicable to them, thereby promoting the dissemination and knowledge of the specific legal regime among the various State institutions. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on court decisions which have applied indigenous customary law and examples of any such decisions that have referred to section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Article 14. Lands. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the difficulties referred to by the Government in ensuring the application of the provisions that are in force in relation to land claims by indigenous communities. A project has been implemented since 2008 for the regularization of indigenous lands, based on an agreement concluded by the INDI and the World Bank. The Committee notes the judgment of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights, dated 24 August 2010 in the case Xákmok Kásek Indigenous Communities v. Paraguay. The specific reparation measures ordered by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights include the State returning to the indigenous community the 10,077 hectares reclaimed and identified by the Xákmok Kásek community. Among the guarantees that the situation will not re-occur, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights calls on the State to adopt in its domestic law the legislative, administrative and any other kind of measures that may be necessary to create an effective system for the indigenous peoples to reclaim ancestral or indigenous lands, which allows them to exercise their right to property. The CUT–A expresses concern because many indigenous communities have been deprived of their ancestral lands and now do not have sufficient lands or a propitious environment. The CUT–A also recalls the judgment of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights of 17 June 2005 in relation to the Yakye Axa indigenous community requiring the State, among other measures, to identify the ancestral lands of the members of the community and return them free of charge within a maximum period of three years from the date of notification of the judgment. The Committee invites the Government to provide information in its next report on the effect given to the reparation measures ordered by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights in relation to the land claims lodged by indigenous peoples. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the effect given to Acts Nos 1372/88 and 43/89, which envisaged a system for the regularization of the settlements of indigenous communities (Article 14(3) of the Convention). The Committee reiterates its request to the Government for the provision of information in the next report on the impact of the INDI/World Bank agreement in relation to this matter.

Article 15. Natural resources. Forestry undertakings. Intrusions. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the application of resolution No. 139/2007 on environmental and forestry management in relation to lands assigned to indigenous communities had been suspended until adequate consultations were held with indigenous peoples. resolution No. 139/2007 was adopted with the aim of “curbing the obvious plundering taking place in several communities”. The CUT–A indicates that there have been cases of the occupation of the lands of indigenous communities by landless rural people, who have extracted wood and engaged in deforestation. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on the legislation that is in force protecting the rights of indigenous peoples to natural resources existing on their lands, including their right to participate and to be consulted concerning the use, management and conservation of these resources. The Committee requests information on the activities of the Environmental Inspectorate, the INDI and other government bodies in relation to the subjects addressed in Article 15 of the Convention.

Relocation. In its previous comments, the Committee referred to the displacements of indigenous communities as a consequence of the installations constructed by the bi-national agency Yaciretá. The Government indicates that over 300 indigenous representatives of 50 organizations participated in the First Meeting with Indigenous Organizations of Paraguay, held on 21–22 February 2012 at the premises of the High-Command of the Army, where the importance was discussed and emphasized of reclaiming indigenous lands in the context of the recuperation of the lands of communities that were relocated by the bi-national agencies Yaciretá and Itaipú. The Committee invites the Government to provide updated information in its next report on the manner in which it is ensured that effect is given to the Convention in the case of the indigenous communities affected by the bi-national agencies Yaciretá and Itaipú. The Committee requests the Government to include in its next report the information required by the report form under Articles 16, 17 and 18 of the Convention, including a summary of court judgments relating to the relocation of indigenous communities.

Article 20. Recruitment and conditions of employment. In September 2011, a communication was forwarded to the Government from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), transmitting the observations of the National Confederation of Workers of Paraguay (CNT), according to which indigenous peoples are exploited, working over 12 hours a day in exchange solely for food. In its previous comments, the Committee also referred to discrimination relating to wages and treatment on the basis of the indigenous origins of workers, and particularly those working on ranches in the interior of the country and for Mennonite communities, under conditions which in certain cases constitute situations of forced labour. The Government indicates that situations of forced labour have not been identified in the inspections carried out in ranches or major agricultural undertakings. The Committee also notes the information provided on the inspections carried out in 2011 in stock-raising undertakings in the Chaco region and the other activities promoted by the Chaco Regional Directorate to ensure compliance with labour rights. The Government also established a Subcommission on Fundamental Labour Rights and the Prevention of Forced Labour, composed of representatives of public institutions, cooperatives, employers, trade unions, non-governmental organizations and organizations of indigenous communities from the area. In its comments made in August 2012, the CUT-A reports the testimony of indigenous women and young persons who were relocated from their communities to the municipality of Mariscal Estigarribia and once again denounces the working conditions of women domestic workers and temporary and informal workers, as well as the exploitation of child labour in the department of Boquerón. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing information on the activities of the Regional Labour Directorate of Chaco and the support received by the representatives of indigenous organizations to ensure the application of the provisions of the Convention on recruitment and conditions of employment, the solutions adopted and the penalties imposed. Considering the new comments made by the CUT-A, the Committee requests the Government to add information on the results of the measures taken by the Government for the elimination of forced labour and discriminatory treatment against indigenous peoples, especially in Mennonite ranches and communities. The Committee also refers to its comments on the application of the fundamental Conventions relating to the abolition of forced labour and the elimination of child labour.

Traditional activities. The Committee notes the Government's indications concerning the training provided to representatives of indigenous peoples and certain courses held for communities. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken to give effect to Article 23 of the Convention and on the impact of Act No. 3232/2007 on assistance with loans for indigenous communities to strengthen and promote their traditional activities.

Article 24. Social security. The Committee notes with interest that since 2011, a monthly pension has been established for all indigenous adults aged over 65 years, administered by the Ministry of Finance. The Teko Pora Programme also provides subsidies for the indigenous population. The Committee invites the Government to continue providing information on the impact of the measures adopted in extending the coverage of social security schemes to indigenous communities.

Health. The Committee notes the Government's indications on the strategic regional planning undertaken with the participation of departmental indigenous organizations, community leaders, traditional indigenous health workers, shamans, midwives and experts in medicinal plants. The Government provides information on the recruitment in 2010 and 2011 of indigenous health promoters. The Committee invites the Government to provide updated information in its next report on the measures adopted under Article 25 of the Convention.

System of mutual hospital assistance. The CUT-A attached to its comments of August 2012 the text of Act No. 3050 of October 2006 creating a system of mutual hospital assistance for comprehensive and specialized medical care for the indigenous population of the Chaco region. The purpose of the mutual system is to cover part of the costs of the indigenous population of the Chaco. The CUT-A expresses reservations concerning the constitutionality of the system of mutual hospital assistance when applied exclusively to one region of the country, and notes that it does not cover all social security benefits. The Committee invites the Government to indicate in its next report the regulations issued under Act No. 3050/2006 and the manner in which the health services and benefits envisaged by the mutual assistance system are provided to beneficiaries.

Education and means of communication. Policies for indigenous children. Programme of action in the department of Caaguazú with the Mbya Guaraní indigenous communities. The Government indicates that Act No. 3733 of 2009 allocated to the indigenous sector 1 per cent of the grants provided for tertiary level education. The CUT-A expresses concern at the very high level of illiteracy that continues to affect the indigenous population. The Committee recalls that 51 per cent of the indigenous population is illiterate. The Committee notes with interest the activities undertaken by the Department of Indigenous Peoples and Well-being of the SNNA, which has been in operation since 2010, and particularly in 17 urban indigenous settlements and in the department of Caaguazú with the Mbya Guaraní indigenous communities. A programme of action was developed through prior consultation with the communities concerned and using a methodology based on the ancestral practices of the Mbya Guaraní community. With the support of the ILO International Programme for the Elimination of Child Labour (ILO–IPEC), the CUT–A and the Rural Association of Paraguay implemented mini-programmes in 2011–12 to promote social dialogue and eradicate child labour in the department of Caaguazú. The Committee welcomes these initiatives, which benefit from the participation of the social partners and indigenous organizations. The Committee invites the Government to provide updated information in its next report on the result of the activities carried out by the General Directorate of Indigenous School Education and the Department of Original Peoples and Well-being, in particular with regard to the fight against illiteracy (Articles 26 to 31 of the Convention).

Article 32. Contacts and cross-border cooperation. The INDI refers to the consultations held by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in the region and the publication of guidelines for the protection of isolated indigenous peoples and for initial contacts in the Amazon region, Gran Chaco and the eastern region of Paraguay, published in May 2012. In its previous comments, the Committee noted a cooperation agreement concluded between Paraguay and the Plurinational State of Bolivia in June 2009 concerning the Ayoreo people, whose ancestral lands cover a large part of the northern region of the Paraguayan Chaco and the south of the Plurinational State of Bolivia. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on the establishment of the bilateral agency responsible for addressing the requirements of the territorial unity of the Ayoreo people and other agreements concluded with neighbouring countries on the subjects covered by the Convention. Please also provide information on the effect given to the guidelines for the protection of isolated indigenous peoples and for initial contacts in the Eastern region of Paraguay.

Peru

The Committee notes with interest the Government's report received in September 2012 providing, in response to the 2011 observation, detailed information on progress made in implementing the Act on the right to prior consultation, promulgated in September 2011; and on the process of drafting the regulations to the Act which came into force on 4 April 2012. The detailed information sent by the Government in a report received in September 2011 will also be examined below.

Communication from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE). The Committee notes that the IOE has submitted observations in August 2012 on the application in law and practice of Articles 6, 7, 15 and 16 of the Convention concerning the requirement of consultation. In this regard, the IOE raises the following issues: the identification of representative institutions, the definition of indigenous territory and the lack of consensus of indigenous and tribal peoples, and the importance for the Committee to be aware of the consequences of the issue in relation to legal security, financial costs and certainty of both public and private investment. The IOE refers to the difficulties, costs and negative impact that the failure by States to comply with the obligation of consultation can have on the projects undertaken by both public and private enterprises. Among other effects, the IOE observed that the erroneous application and interpretation of the requirement of prior consultation can be a legal obstacle and lead to business difficulties, harm the reputation of enterprises and result in financial costs. The IOE also states that the difficulties to comply with the obligation of consultation may have an impact on the projects that enterprises may wish to carry out with a view to creating a conducive environment for economic and social development, the creation of decent and productive work and the sustainable development of society as a whole. The Committee invites the Government to include in its next report any comments that it deems appropriate on the observations made by the IOE.

Part VIII of the report form. Communications from indigenous peoples. The Committee notes the communication from the General Confederation of Workers of Peru (CGTP) enclosing the 2012 Alternative Report prepared by five national and regional indigenous organizations and the Indigenous Peoples Working Group of the National Coordinator for Human Rights. The Alternative Report 2012, disseminated over the Internet, was likewise sent by the ILO to the Government of Peru in August 2012. The Committee invites the Government, in preparing its next report, to continue to consult with the social partners and indigenous organizations on the measures taken to give effect to the Convention. It hopes that in 2013 the Government will submit a report containing specific information on the matters raised in this observation and on the results achieved by the measures taken to give effect to each provision of the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. Peoples covered by the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee pointed out that all indigenous communities must be covered by the Convention, regardless of their designation. The Committee notes the criteria for the identification of indigenous or original peoples laid down in the Regulation which provides that the criteria established in section 7 of the Act on the right to prior consultation “should be interpreted within the framework of Article 1 of the Convention” (section 3(k) of the Regulation). Furthermore, Ministerial Resolution No. 202-2012-MC of 22 May 2012 approved a directive regulating the operation of the official database of indigenous or original peoples. The database is a declarative register and reference tool, not a constitutive register of rights. The Committee invites the Government to indicate in its next report which indigenous peoples have been entered in the official database and to explain how the latter has been updated and evaluated.

Articles 2 and 33. Coordinated and systematic action. In reply to earlier comments, the Government referred in its report of September 2011 to plans devised by the National Strategic Planning Centre (CEPLAN), including the Comprehensive Development Plan for the Apurímac, Ayacucho and Huancavelica Indian Peoples 2010–21 (DIPA), the Madre de Dios regional government’s activities (2007–21) and the participation of indigenous peoples in the Ucayali regional government’s development plans. The National Strategy entitled “CRECER” in districts with indigenous peoples is aimed at a reduction of several percentage points in malnutrition among children by 2011. The Committee recalls that the duties of the National Institute for the Development of Andean, Amazonian and Afroperuvian Peoples (INDEPA) were taken over by the Ministry of Culture. The Vice-Ministry for Inter-Cultural Affairs is the Executive’s specialized technical body for indigenous matters (section 19 of the Act on the right to prior consultation and section 28 of the Regulation). The alternative reports sent by the CGTP stress the need for institutional reforms with an inter-cultural focus. The Committee invites the Government to specify the authorities that have responsibility at national and regional level for the matters covered by the Convention and to indicate the steps taken to ensure that these authorities have the means to perform their duties properly. The Committee requests the Government to indicate how the participation of the peoples concerned in the development of the programmes and plans mentioned in its reports has been ensured (Article 2(1)). The Committee points out that the planning, coordination, execution and evaluation of measures must be undertaken in cooperation with the peoples concerned (Article 33(2)) and hopes that the report will include an evaluation of the said programmes and plans as required by the Convention.

Article 3. Human rights and fundamental freedoms. Investigation of events in Bagua Province (Department of Amazonas). In its previous comments, echoing the Conference Committee at its 2009 and 2010 sessions, the Committee of Experts asked the Government to report on the results of the court proceedings pertaining to events that occurred in Bagua Province on 5 June 2009. In the report received in September 2011, the Government summed up the various recommendations made by the public bodies and other entities that investigated the events, including the conclusions drawn by the Congress of the Republic in June 2010. The Congress of the Republic requested the Public Prosecutor to identify the individuals and authorities involved, and also to find those politically responsible. The Government added in its report detailed information on the status of the different court proceedings. The alternative reports sent by the CGTP assert that the events in Bagua are evidence of the need for an inter-cultural dialogue to be conducted in good faith and that social protest must not be turned into a criminal offence. The Committee requests the Government in its next report to include new and up-to-date information on any trials still under way relating to the events in Bagua. The Committee invites the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that no force or coercion shall be used in violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous peoples and to avoid criminalizing events held by indigenous peoples.

Article 6. Consultation. The Committee again welcomes the adoption of the Act on the right to prior consultation and its Regulation, which contain many references to the provisions of the Convention. Numerous references to the Convention and to ILO technical assistance and documentation are also to be found in the Methodology Guide published by the Vice-Ministry for Inter-Cultural Affairs to provide guidance and assist with the management of public sector activities involving indigenous peoples. The Act and its Regulation set forth the stages of the consultation procedure, facilitate the identification of indigenous peoples and define the measures that are subject to consultation. They stress the importance of conducting consultations in good faith as part of a genuine inter-cultural dialogue and the need to pay special attention to the situation of women, children, persons with disabilities and the elderly (section 5(a) and (g) of the Regulation). The right of petition of indigenous organizations has been included in section 9 of the Regulation. The Government indicates that some indigenous organizations refrained from participating in the consultations on the Regulation. The alternative reports sent by the CGTP allude to objections to the consultation process and the content of the Act and its Regulation. The Committee notes that taxation and budgetary rules will not be subject to consultation (section 5(k) of the Regulation). Also exempt from consultation are any exceptional or temporary state decisions taken to address emergency situations arising from natural or technological disasters (section 5(l) of the Regulation) and administrative measures deemed to be supplementary (12th supplementary, transitional and final provision of the Regulation). Furthermore, the current legislation does not envisage further legal provisions on the machinery for participation and for participation in benefits (fifth and tenth supplementary, transitional and final provisions of the Regulation) required by the Convention. The Committee understands that the Act on the right to prior consultation and its Regulation, the operation of the official database on indigenous peoples, the dissemination of a methodology guide and the call for indigenous interpreters to receive training in translation, interpretation and prior consultation, are evidence of progress made in establishing, as the Committee encouraged governments to do in its general observation published in 2010, “effective consultation mechanisms that take into account the visions of governments and indigenous and tribal peoples concerning the procedures to be followed”. The Committee hopes that the next report will contain information allowing it to ascertain how the new measures adopted under the Act on the right to prior consultation and its Regulation have been implemented. Bearing in mind that full effect has not as yet been given to the provisions on participation and cooperation by indigenous peoples set out in Article 6(1)(b) and (c), Article 7 and Part II (Land) of the Convention, the Committee encourages the Government to ensure, in consultation with the indigenous peoples and other interested parties, that appropriate legislative measures are adopted and that the provisions of the current legislation are revised accordingly.

Article 12. Legal proceedings. In reply to earlier comments, the Government states in the report received in September 2011 that the right to consultation has been enforceable since 2 February 1995, when Convention No. 169 entered into force. The Government also reports on the capacity-building activities for judiciary staff in the area of indigenous rights. In the report received in September 2012, the Government gives an account of the efforts made to reinforce local courts (justicia de paz) and inter-cultural justice. The Committee invites the Government in its next report to provide information on any court decisions settling matters of principle relating to the rights protected by the Convention. Please include examples of decisions by local courts relating to the Convention (Part IV of the report form), and related follow-up.

Article 14. Land. In the report received in September 2011, the Government states that the regional governments are responsible for the adoption of measures needed to guarantee the ownership rights of indigenous communities and to move the titling process forward. The Committee notes that 6,067 rural communities were recognized, 5,095 of which have been granted land titles, with titling still pending for 972 native communities. Of the 1,447 native communities registered or recognized, a total of 1,265 had received titles by January 2010, while titling is still pending for some 182 such communities. The Government confirms that the first supplementary provision of Supreme Decree No. 020-2008-AG establishes that the lands owned by peasant or native communities are not deemed unclaimed land suitable for agriculture, for the purposes of Legislative Decree No. 994 of 2009 on the promotion of private investment in irrigation projects to extend the agricultural frontier to lands owned by peasant or native communities. In earlier comments the Committee examined the situation of the Santo Domingo de Olmos (Lambayeque) community, where agreement had been reached to promote optimum use of water and new irrigation infrastructure. The Committee invites the Government to continue to report on the land registration and titling processes conducted by regional governments, specifying the surface areas titled and the beneficiary communities in each region of the country. Please also provide examples of the manner in which land claims submitted by indigenous peoples have been settled.

Regulation of the use of forestry resources and the mining and energy sector. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest that the Forestry and Forest Fauna Act (Act No. 29763, published on 22 July 2011) addresses recognition and respect for the rights of indigenous peoples and includes provisions on woods in native communities' lands. In its report of September 2011 the Government states that, since the legislation has not been consolidated, a bill was submitted to the Congress of the Republic for the adoption of a single text grouping together all the rules governing activities in the electricity sector. The Committee invites the Government to send information in its next report on the use made in practice of the current legal provisions on the consultation and participation of indigenous peoples as regards the use of forestry resources. The Committee asks the Government to describe the manner in which the indigenous peoples have been consulted regarding the legislation governing activities in the electricity sector, indicating the provisions applying to activities in the mining and energy sector which give effect to Article 15 of the Convention.

Mining and hydroelectricity. The Committee notes the information sent by the Government in its September 2011 report concerning activities in the peasant community of San Lucas de Colán (Piura), the area of influence of the Sallca Pucará hydroelectric power station (Cuzco), the peasant community of San Antonio de Juprog (Ancash) and the territory of the Matsés people (Loreto). The Government states that by intervening in a timely manner, in some of these instances, it succeeded in containing the disputes. In one case it was noted that a company had undertaken commitments such as hiring and youth training or road building, which it failed to meet in full thus creating tension between the parties. The General Union of Wholesalers and Retailers of the Grau Tacna Commercial Centre (SIGECOMGT) once again expressed concern in April 2011 about the situation of certain Aymará peasant communities. Its observations were sent to the Government in August 2007, May 2008 and August 2011. SIGECOMGT transmitted the Views (communication No. 1457/2006) of the Human Rights Committee issued under article 5, paragraph 4, of the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and adopted at its 95th Session (March–April 2009), in which the committee observed that there were no prior consultations concerning the construction of wells (CCPR/C/95/D/1457/2006, 24 April 2009, paragraph 7.7). SIGECOMGT refers to new administrative measures adopted between August 2009 and February 2011 concerning gold mining, well drilling and the use of water resources. The 2012 Alternative Report sent by the CGTP refers to and documents important new cases: the Conga mining project, due to which a state of emergency was declared in four provinces in September 2011 and social tension persists in 2012; environmental pollution due to mining, affecting the population and the river Tintaya micro-basin, which prompted the peasant communities to file a complaint with the authorities of Espinar Province in November 2011. In Cordillera del Cóndor (Amazonas), in November 2011, 114 titles for mining rights were either registered or being processed covering an area of some 99,000 hectares that overlaps with an area occupied by native communities. The Committee requests the Government in its next report to include detailed information on the measures taken to ensure observance of the Convention, particularly Article 15, in the situations referred to in previous comments and in the cases submitted by the social partners and indigenous organizations. The Committee invites the Government to provide in its next report information on the effect of the measures taken to investigate the complaints filed with the competent authorities regarding environmental pollution in territories occupied by indigenous peoples. The Committee asks the Government, if environmental pollution is confirmed, to make every effort to protect the life and health of the members of the communities affected.

Participation in benefits. The Government states in the report received in September 2011 that Emergency Decree No. 079-2009 provides for local and regional governments to earmark 5 per cent of the funds received in petroleum royalties for public investment projects and social expenditure. Emergency Decree No. 026-2010 increased the regional governments' requirement to 10 per cent, making more funds available and broadening investment to cover irrigation systems, micro-enterprises, the opening of pathways, bridges and retaining walls. The Government also refers to gas royalties and funds available from the Social and Economic Development Fund of the Camisea gas field (Cuzco). Some 300 participants benefited from a programme of training on hydrocarbons for indigenous leaders and four students from the Amazon region obtained university scholarships. The Committee refers to Article 15 which establishes the rights of indigenous peoples to the natural resources and the manner in which they should participate in the benefits from exploration or exploitation of the resources pertaining to their lands. The Committee refers to the other matters relating to the exploitation of natural resources raised in this observation and asks the Government to provide in its next report examples of the concrete effects the system of royalties and the other measures adopted by local and regional governments have had on the lives of indigenous peoples, such as their participation in the benefits, their development and the areas in which they live.

Education. Media. In the report received in September 2011, the Government states that more than 20,000 teachers in bilingual schools received training between 2006 and 2009. By mid-2011, nearly 193,000 teachers had received training through the National Programme for the Promotion of Bilingual Teaching in the Peruvian Amazon. According to information in the 2012 Alternative Report sent by the CGTP, as at August 2012, 20 per cent of indigenous children between 6 and 11 years of age had no access to a learning centre. The abovementioned report indicates that there is still a serious information deficit owing to a lack of accurate data on indigenous children of school age and inter-cultural and bilingual education institutions. The Committee stresses the importance of the provisions on the participation and involvement of the peoples concerned in the formulation and implementation of education programmes (Article 27). The Committee invites the Government in its next report to include information on the impact of the measures adopted in terms of eliminating prejudice against indigenous peoples and promoting inter-cultural and bilingual education, in particular, among indigenous girls and boys of compulsory school age (6–11 years old).

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) (ratification: 2002)

Communication from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE). The Committee notes that the IOE has submitted observations in August 2012 on the application in law and practice of Articles 6, 7, 15 and 16 of the Convention concerning the requirement of consultation. In this regard, the IOE raises the following issues: the identification of representative institutions, the definition of indigenous territory and the lack of consensus of indigenous and tribal peoples, and the importance for the Committee to be aware of the consequences of the issue in relation to legal security, financial costs and certainty of both public and private investment. The IOE refers to the difficulties, costs and negative impact that the failure by States to comply with the obligation of consultation can have on the projects undertaken by both public and private enterprises. Among other effects, the IOE observed that the erroneous application and interpretation of the requirement of prior consultation can be a legal obstacle and lead to business difficulties, harm the reputation of enterprises and result in financial costs. The IOE also states that the difficulties to comply with the obligation of consultation may have an impact on the projects that enterprises may wish to carry out with a view to creating a conducive environment for economic and social development, the creation of decent and productive work and the sustainable development of society as a whole. The Committee notes the reply received from the Government in November 2012 concerning the lack of consultation with indigenous communities. The Government recalls the various measures adopted for the recognition of a pluri-cultural and multi-ethnic Republic in the context of the National Constitution, which has been in force since March 2000, and to give effect to the Basic Act on indigenous peoples and communities, enacted in December 2005. The Office of the Ombudsman, the Standing Commission for Indigenous Peoples and the People's Ministries for Indigenous Peoples and for the Environment work together. The Government adds that the state policy is implemented with the active leading and participation of indigenous peoples. The national Constitution entrusts responsibility to the executive authorities, with the participation of indigenous peoples, for the demarcation of their lands and to guarantee their right of collective ownership. Indigenous peoples elect three deputies to the National Assembly in accordance with the Electoral Act, in conformity with their traditions and customs. In its observation and direct request in 2009, the Committee noted the progress made by certain of these measures and requested the Government to provide further information on the application of the Convention. The Committee invites the Government, when preparing the report that is due in 2013, to communicate with the representative organizations of employers and workers and to consult the organizations of indigenous peoples in the country, through their traditional institutions, concerning the measures adopted to give effect to the Convention (Parts VII and VIII of the report form). The Committee hopes that in 2013 the Government will provide a report containing replies to the specific points raised in 2009 and on the results achieved by the measures adopted to give effect to each of the provisions of the Convention.

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 64 (Burundi); Convention No. 107 (Iraq); Convention No. 169 (Denmark, Fiji, Nepal).

Nursing Personnel Convention, 1977 (No. 149) (ratification: 1978)

Articles 2, 5 and 6 of the Convention. Employment and working conditions for nursing personnel – Consultations – Regulation of hours of work. The Committee notes the comments of the Ecuadorian Medical Federation, which were received on 29 June 2012 and transmitted to the Government on 29 August 2012, concerning the application of the Convention. According to the Federation, the provisions of the Organic Public Service Act (LOSEP) of 2010, particularly section 47(k) regulating compulsory redundancies, and Executive Decree No. 813 of 2011 setting out the procedure for such redundancies, run contrary to Articles 2, 5 and 6 of the Convention since they were adopted without social dialogue, provide no opportunity for workers to intervene whether administratively or judicially, and permit arbitrary dismissals of medical personnel. The Federation indicates that in 2011, approximately 5,000 public service workers, including medical personnel, were dismissed pursuant to the new legislation. In addition, the Federation alleges that the new laws have increased the working hours to eight hours per day, which violates constitutionally protected rights of workers engaged in dangerous and unhealthy occupations. The Committee also notes the report of the technical assistance mission undertaken by the Office from 15 to 18 February 2011, which noted possible discrepancies between the Labour Code and LOSEP and ratified ILO Conventions. The Committee requests the Government to transmit any comments it may wish to make in reply to the observations of the Ecuadorian Medical Federation. Moreover, noting that a Constitutional Court ruling is pending on the constitutionality of LOSEP and also that the Government is considering labour law reforms based on the recommendations of the ILO technical assistance mission, the Committee requests the Government to keep the Office informed of further developments on these matters. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide its response to the Committee's last comment formulated in 2009 addressing a number of issues concerning national law and policy with respect to nursing services and nursing personnel.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 149 (Guyana, Iraq, Luxembourg); Convention No. 172 (Guyana); Convention No. 177 (Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following State in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 177 (Ireland).

II. Observations concerning the submission to the competent authorities of the Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the International Labour Conference (article 19 of the Constitution)

Albania

The Committee invites the Government to report on the submission to the Albanian Parliament of the remaining instruments adopted by the Conference at its 82nd Session (the Protocol of 1995 to the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947), 90th Session (Recommendations Nos 193 and 194), and all the instruments adopted at the 78th, 86th, 89th, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions.

Angola

Failure to submit. The Committee invites the Government to provide the required information on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted at the 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions of the Conference (2003–12). The Committee also recalls that the Government is requested to provide information on the submission to the National Assembly of the Protection of Workers' Claims (Employer's Insolvency) Recommendation, 1992 (No. 180) (79th Session, 1992), the 1995 Protocol to the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (82nd Session, 1995), and the Job Creation in Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises Recommendation, 1998 (No. 189) (86th Session, 1998).

Antigua and Barbuda

The Committee notes the indications provided by the Government in August and October 2012 indicating that Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference from the 83rd to the 101st Sessions (1996–2012) were submitted to the competent authority. The Government also indicated that Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189), and its corresponding Recommendation, 2011 (No. 201), were submitted to the competent authority on 11 July 2012 by way of a circulation note. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would confirm that all the abovementioned instruments were submitted to the Parliament of Antigua and Barbuda. It further invites the Government to specify the dates on which the instruments adopted from the 83rd to the 101st Sessions of the Conference were submitted to the Parliament of Antigua and Barbuda.

Azerbaijan

The Committee refers to its previous observations and requests the Government to provide information with regard to the submission to the Milli Mejlis (National Assembly) of Recommendation No. 180 (79th Session), and the instruments adopted at the 83rd, 84th, 89th, 90th, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions of the Conference. Please also indicate the date of submission of Recommendation No. 195 to the National Assembly.

Bahamas

The Committee regrets that the Government has not replied to its previous comments. It asks the Government to supply information on the submission to Parliament of the 20 instruments adopted by the Conference at 11 sessions held between 1997 and 2012 (85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 92nd, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions).

Bahrain

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in August 2012 indicating that the national practice requires, by virtue of the Constitution, the submission of international Conventions to the Council of Ministers which is the body responsible for the formulation of the State's public policy and following up on its implementation (section 47(a) of the Constitution of Bahrain). The Committee recalls that the Government indicated in September 2011 that with the beginning of parliamentary life in 2002 and the establishment of a National Assembly – composed of the Consultative Council (Majlis Al-Shura) and the Council of Representatives (Majlis al-Nuwab) – there was a need to establish a new mechanism to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the National Assembly. The Committee notes that, by virtue of article 19, paragraphs 5 and 6, of the Constitution, each of the Members of the Organization undertakes to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies for the enactment of legislation or other action. In the Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, the Governing Body indicated that the competent authority is the authority which, under the Constitution of each State, has power to legislate or to take other action in order to implement Conventions and Recommendations. The competent national authority should normally be the legislature. Even in the case of instruments not requiring action in the form of legislation, it would be desirable to ensure that the purpose of submission, which is also to bring Conventions and Recommendations to the knowledge of the public, is fully met by submitting these instruments also to the parliamentary body. The Committee therefore urges the Government, as did the Conference Committee, to report on the submission to the National Assembly of the 19 instruments adopted by the Conference at ten sessions held between 2000 and 2012.

Bangladesh

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement made by the Government representative in June 2012 indicating that the process of submission is a long one in his country involving various steps such as translation to Bangla and the approval by the Cabinet and relevant authorities. In a communication received in December 2012, the Government reiterates the information provided at the Conference Committee and adds that the process of submission will follow tripartite consultation. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted at the 77th Session (Convention No. 170 and Recommendation No. 177), the 79th Session (Convention No. 173 and Recommendation No. 180), the 84th Session (Convention No. 179 and Recommendations Nos 185, 186 and 187), and the 85th Session (Recommendation No. 188), as well as all the instruments adopted at the 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the 37 pending instruments to Parliament.

Belize

Serious failure to submit. The Committee refers to its previous observations and asks the Government to provide information on the submission to the National Assembly of the 44 instruments adopted by the Conference at its 84th (Maritime) Session (October 1996), and during the other 20 sessions held between 1990 and 2012. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the 44 pending instruments to the National Assembly.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government indicating that on 21 August 2012 the Chamber of Deputies of the Plurinational Legislative Assembly approved a bill for the ratification of Convention No. 189. The Committee also recalls that on 26 April 2005 the international labour Conventions adopted by the Conference between 1990 and 2003 were submitted to the National Congress. The Committee requests the Government to report the decision taken by the National Legislative Assembly in relation to the Conventions submitted to it in April 2005. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide all relevant information on the submission to the National Congress of the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference between 1990 and 2010.

Brazil

The Committee recalls that Conventions Nos 128, 129, 130, 149, 150, 156 and 157 and the other instruments adopted at the 52nd, 78th, 79th, 81st, 82nd (1995 Protocol), 83rd, 84th (Conventions Nos 179 and 180; 1996 Protocol, Recommendations Nos 186 and 187), 85th, 86th, 88th, 90th, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions of the Conference are still waiting to be submitted to the National Congress. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon report on other measures that have been taken to submit the 41 pending instruments to the National Congress. In this regard, the Committee again recalls that the Tripartite Committee on International Relations (CTRI) requested the Ministry of External Relations in March 2006 to take the necessary steps to submit to the National Congress the Tenants and Share-croppers Recommendation, 1968 (No. 132), the Job Creation in Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises Recommendation, 1998 (No. 189), the Promotion of Cooperatives Recommendation, 2002 (No. 193), the List of Occupational Diseases Recommendation, 2002 (No. 194), and the Human Resources Development Recommendation, 2004 (No. 195).

Burundi

The Committee asks the Government to supply information on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted at the 94th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions of the Conference.

Cambodia

Submission to the National Assembly. The Committee notes with interest that, on 21 December 2011, the Government submitted to the National Assembly information on the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1973 and 2007. The Government further reported that the texts of the instruments were made available to the National Assembly in Khmer and English, including a summary of each instrument. The Committee welcomes this progress and hopes that the Government will provide regularly the required information on the obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the National Assembly. It also invites the Government to provide information on the submission to the National Assembly of the Convention and Recommendations adopted by the Conference at its 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions (2010–12).

Chile

The Committee recalls that the ratification of Convention No. 187 was registered in April 2011. The Government indicated in previous communications its intention to examine the failure to submit to the National Congress the instruments adopted at the Conference. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide the information required on the submission to the National Congress of the instruments adopted at 15 sessions of the Conference held between 1996 and 2012 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th (Recommendation No. 198), 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions).

Colombia

Submission to the Congress of the Republic. The Committee notes with interest the information transmitted by the Government indicating that, on 31 October 2012, the pending instruments adopted by the Conference between 1988 and 2012 were submitted to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress of the Republic. The Government also reported that, on 4 April 2012, Convention No. 189 was submitted to the Congress of the Republic for its ratification. The Committee welcomes this progress and hopes that the Government will continue to provide on a regular basis the required information on the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference to the Congress of the Republic.

Comoros

Serious failure to submit. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to submit the 40 instruments adopted by the Conference at the 19 sessions held between 1992 and 2012 to the Assembly of the Union of Comoros.

Congo

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement made by the Government representative to the Conference Committee in June 2012 recalling that the Ministry of Labour and the Secretary-General of the Government had agreed to submit to the National Assembly, every three months, a certain number of Conventions with a view to their ratification. The Committee notes the bills ratifying Conventions Nos 184, 188 and 189. The Committee welcomes the efforts made by the governmental departments concerned with a view to complying with the country's constitutional obligations. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, invites the Government to complete the procedure of the submission of the 90 Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols not yet submitted to the National Assembly. It recalls that these consist of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 54th (Recommendations Nos 135 and 136), 55th (Recommendations Nos 137, 138, 139, 140, 141 and 142), 58th (Convention No. 137 and Recommendation No. 145), 60th (Conventions Nos 141 and 143, Recommendations Nos 149 and 151), 62nd, 63rd (Recommendation No. 156), 67th (Recommendations Nos 163, 164 and 165), 68th (Convention No. 157 and Recommendations Nos 167 and 168), 69th, 70th, 71st (Recommendations Nos 170 and 171), 72nd, 74th and 75th (Recommendations Nos 175 and 176) Sessions, as well as the instruments adopted at 21 sessions of the Conference held between 1990 and 2012.

Côte d'Ivoire

Serious failure to submit. The Committee recalls the Government's communication received in October 2011 indicating that the Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the Conference between 1995 and 2010 were submitted to the Economic and Social Council on 25 August 2011. The Committee once again invites the Government, in the same way as the Conference Committee, to complete the steps to submit to the National Assembly the 31 instruments (Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols) adopted by the Conference at the 15 sessions held between June 1996 and 2012 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions).

Croatia

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that the reports and translations of the majority of the instruments adopted between 1998 and 2011 have been prepared. Because of parliamentary elections, the matter has not yet been included in the agenda of the Croatian Parliament. The Committee again invites the Government to take appropriate measures in order to ensure that the 18 remaining instruments adopted by the Conference at ten sessions held between 1998 and 2012 (86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 92nd, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st) are submitted to the Croatian Parliament.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Serious failure to submit. The Committee recalls that the Ministry of Labour prepared submission reports for the instruments adopted by the Conference from its 83rd to its 98th Sessions with a view to forwarding them to the competent authorities for examination and adoption. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to provide other relevant information on the effective submission to Parliament of the 31 instruments adopted at the 15 sessions of the Conference held between 1996 and 2012.

Djibouti

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with serious concern that the failure of submission by Djibouti concerns the instruments adopted at the 29 sessions of the Conference held between 1980 and 2012. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, requests the Government to make every effort in a tripartite framework to ensure that it is in a position in the near future to provide the required information on the submission to the National Assembly of the 65 instruments adopted at the 29 sessions of the Conference held between 1980 and 2012 (66th, 68th, 69th, 70th, 71st, 72nd, 74th, 75th, 76th, 77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions).

Dominica

Serious failure to submit. The Committee regrets that the Government has not replied to its previous observations. In the same way as the Conference Committee, it requests that the Government announce that the 38 instruments adopted by the Conference during 18 sessions held between 1993 and 2012 (80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions) have been submitted to the House of Assembly.

El Salvador

Serious failure to submit. The Committee refers to the observations that it has been formulating for many years and requests the Government to provide information on the submission to the Congress of the Republic of the remaining instruments adopted at the 63rd (Convention No. 148 and Recommendations Nos 156 and 157), 67th (Convention No. 154 and Recommendation No. 163), 69th (Recommendation No. 167) and 90th (Recommendations Nos 193 and 194) Sessions. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the submission to the Congress of the Republic of the instruments adopted at 20 sessions of the Conference held between October 1976 and June 2012 (62nd, 65th, 66th, 68th, 70th, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions).

Equatorial Guinea

Serious failure to submit. The Committee recalls the communication dated 9 May 2008 in which the Ministry of Labour and Social Security requested the Head of Government to proceed with the submission to the House of People's Representatives of the instruments adopted by the Conference at 13 sessions held between 1993 and 2006. The Committee once again asks the Government to provide the other relevant information on compliance with the obligation of submission, and particularly the date on which the instruments adopted between 1993 and 2006 were in fact submitted to the House of People's Representatives. The Committee requests the Government to report on the submission to the House of People's Representatives of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions (2010–12).

Ethiopia

Submission to the House of People's Representatives. The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government in September 2012 indicating that the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 88th (Recommendation No. 191), 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th and 100th Sessions were submitted to the House of People's Representatives on 7 March 2012. The Government also indicated that Recommendation No. 202 was submitted to the House of People's Representatives on 24 September 2012. The Committee welcomes this progress and hopes that the Government will provide regularly the required information on the obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the House of People's Representatives.

Fiji

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in May 2012 indicating that Fiji's current "competent authority" (the Cabinet) has approved the ratification of Conventions Nos 142, 181, the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), and Convention No. 183. The Committee notes that the Cabinet has also examined Recommendations Nos 188, 189, 193 and 194. The Government also reiterated that it is committed to adopt a new Constitution by 2013 and to hold general elections in 2014. The Committee thus notes that the Government will be able to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference only after the establishment of a Parliament. The Committee therefore requests information about any developments in regard to the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference at the corresponding sessions held between 1996 and 2012, as required by article 19 of the ILO Constitution.

Gabon

The Committee notes the information received in September 2012 on the measures taken by the government to submit the Convention and the Recommendations adopted by the Conference at the 100th and 101st sessions. The Committee invites the Government to provide information concerning the submission to Parliament of the other Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols not yet submitted to Parliament that were adopted at the 82nd, 83rd, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 92nd, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions of the Conference.

Georgia

The Committee notes that the instruments adopted at the 100th Session of the Conference were submitted to the Parliament of Georgia on 2 September 2011. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference at 15 sessions held between 1993 and 2012 (80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th and 101st Sessions).

Ghana

The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government on the submission of the 21 remaining instruments adopted by the Conference between 1993 and 2011 to the Fourth Republican Parliament on 4 June 2012. Recommendation No. 202 was submitted to Parliament on 3 October 2012. The Committee welcomes this progress and hopes that the Government will provide regularly the required information on the obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to Parliament.

Guinea

Serious failure to submit. The Committee refers to its previous comments and, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to provide the information requested regarding the submission to the National Assembly of the 29 instruments adopted at 14 sessions held by the Conference between October 1996 and June 2012 (84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions).

Guinea-Bissau

The Committee recalls the communication received from the Government in August 2011 indicating that the ratification of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), has been approved by the Council of Ministers and is pending tabling in the National People's Assembly. The Government also intended to request support from the ILO Subregional Office in Dakar in order to conclude the process of submission of the pending instruments adopted by the Conference. The Committee once again expresses its hope that the Government will soon be in a position to report that the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions were submitted to the National People's Assembly.

Haiti

Serious failure to submit. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, hopes that the Government will make every effort in the near future to be in a position to announce the submission to the National Assembly of the following instruments:

- (a) the remaining instruments from the 67th Session (Conventions Nos 154 and 155, and Recommendations Nos 163 and 164);
- (b) the instruments adopted at the 68th Session;
- (c) the remaining instruments adopted at the 75th Session (Convention No. 168, and Recommendations Nos 175 and 176); and
- (d) the instruments adopted at 22 sessions of the Conference held between 1989 and 2012.

Honduras

The Committee notes the information transmitted by the Government in October 2012 on the prospects for ratification of the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), and the examination of the Social Protection Floors Recommendation, 2012 (No. 202). It further notes with interest that the ratification of Convention No. 102 was registered on 1 November 2012. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide all the required information on the submission to the Congress of the Republic of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions, held between 2006 and 2012.

Iraq

Serious failure to submit. The Committee regrets that the Government has not replied to its previous observations. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to provide relevant information on the submission to the Council of Representatives established under the 2005 Iraqi Constitution of the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference from 2000 to 2012.

Ireland

The Committee notes that the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 100th Session were submitted to the Irish Parliament Committee on Jobs, Enterprise and Innovation on 14 June 2012. The Committee refers to its previous comments and, in the same way as the Conference Committee, it urges the Government to provide information on the submission to the Oireachtas (Parliament) of the instruments adopted by the Conference at ten sessions held between 2000 and 2012 (88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th and 101st Sessions).

Jamaica

The Committee regrets that the Government has not replied to its previous comments. The Committee invites the Government to provide the relevant information regarding the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions (2004–12).

Jordan

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in March and August 2012 indicating that the Ministry of Labour shall submit the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 100th Session to the national tripartite committee when the examination by the relevant official bodies is finalized. The Committee refers to its previous comments and expresses again its hope that the instruments adopted by the Conference between 2004 and 2012 (93rd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions) will be submitted without delay to the National Assembly (Majlis Al-Umma).

Kazakhstan

The Committee notes that the ratification of Convention No. 183 was registered on 13 June 2012. The Committee refers to its previous observations and requests the Government to supply the requested information on the submission to Parliament of the 33 instruments still pending submission which were adopted by the Conference between 1993 and 2012. It urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to Parliament.

Kiribati

The Committee recalls that the ratification of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), was registered in October 2011. In the same way as the Conference Committee, the Committee invites the Government to submit to Parliament the other 18 instruments adopted by the Conference at ten sessions held between 2000 and 2012 (88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions).

Kuwait

The Committee recalls the information provided by the Government in September 2009, indicating that it will solicit the views of the social partners on the possibility of ratifying Conventions before referring the matter to the National Assembly. The Committee requests that the Government complete the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions to the National Assembly (Majlis Al-Ummah).

The Committee hopes that the Government will also provide the date of submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted at the 77th Session (1990: Conventions Nos 170 and 171, Recommendations Nos 177 and 178, and the Protocol of 1990), 80th Session (1993: Recommendation No. 181), 86th Session (1998: Recommendation No. 189) and 89th Session (2001: Convention No. 184 and Recommendation No. 192) of the Conference.

Kyrgyzstan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with serious concern that the Government has not communicated information on the submission to the competent authorities of instruments adopted by the Conference at the 19 sessions held between 1992 and 2012.

The Committee notes that Kyrgyzstan has been a Member of the Organization since 31 March 1992. It recalls that, under article 19 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization, every Member undertakes to bring the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies “for the enactment of legislation or other action”. The Governing Body of the International Labour Office has adopted a Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, asking for particulars on this subject. The Committee hopes that the Government will provide all the information requested by the questionnaire at the end of the Memorandum about the competent authority, the date on which the instruments were submitted and any proposals made by the Government on measures to be taken with regard to the instruments that have been submitted.

The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to make every effort to comply with the constitutional obligation of submission and recalls that the Office can provide technical assistance to overcome this serious delay.

Liberia

The Committee notes the Government’s communication requesting technical assistance in this field received in May 2012. It hopes that the ILO will be able to provide the assistance requested. In the same way as the Conference Committee, the Committee expresses again its hope that the Government will soon be in a position to submit to the National Legislature the 19 remaining instruments adopted by the Conference between 2000 and 2012, as well as the 1990 and 1995 Protocols.

Libya

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the Government’s communication dated 30 August 2012 indicating the difficult conditions experienced by the country under the previous regime and the current process intended to establish a democracy governed by justice, equality and the rule of law. The Committee also notes the commitment of the new authorities to comply with the obligations set out in the ILO Constitution. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to provide the information required on the submission to the competent authorities, within the meaning of article 19, paragraphs 5 and 6, of the ILO Constitution, of the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference at 15 sessions held between 1996 and 2012 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions).

Madagascar

The Committee notes the statement provided by the Government in October 2012 indicating that it fully recognizes its obligation to submit the 13 instruments adopted by the Conference at seven sessions of the Conference held between 2002 and 2011. The Government indicates that the instruments will be submitted at the appropriate time when the socio-political crisis has ended. The Committee hopes to receive relevant information on the submission to the National Assembly of the 14 instruments adopted by the Conference between 2002 and 2012.

Mali

The Committee invites the Government to provide the relevant information concerning the submission to the National Assembly of the Protocols of 1996 and 2002, as well as of the instruments adopted at the 86th, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions of the Conference.

Mauritania

In its previous comments, the Committee noted the communication of 28 September 2008 by which the Ministry of Employment calls upon the ministry responsible for communications and relations with Parliament to bring to Parliament's attention the Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the Conference at its 81st, 92nd and 96th Sessions. The Committee again requests the Government to provide the information required on the submission to the National Assembly of Recommendations Nos 182 (81st Session, 1994) and 195 (92nd Session, 2004), the Protocols of 1995 (82nd Session) and 1996 (84th Session), and the instruments adopted at the 94th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions of the Conference.

Republic of Moldova

The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 92nd, 94th, 95th (Recommendation No. 198), 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions.

Mozambique

Serious failure to submit. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, hopes that the Government will be in a position to provide the relevant information on the submission to the Assembly of the Republic of the 31 instruments adopted by the Conference at the 15 sessions held between 1996 and 2012.

Niger

The Committee regrets that the Government has not replied to its previous comments. The Committee requests the Government to provide the information required concerning the submission to the National Assembly of the 27 instruments adopted by the Conference at 14 sessions (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th (for the Employment Relationship Recommendation, 2006 (No. 198)), 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions) held between 1996 and 2012.

Nigeria

The Committee requests the Government to provide the relevant information on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 94th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions. It further recalls that, under Convention No. 144, effective prior tripartite consultations have to be held on the proposals made to the National Assembly when submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Pakistan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in October 2012 indicating that the issue raised by the Committee in its previous observations on the failure to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference was discussed during a tripartite meeting held in the Ministry of Human Resource Development on 10 August 2012. The Committee therefore asks the Government to submit to Majlis-e-Shoura (Parliament) the instruments adopted by the Conference at 16 sessions held between 1994 and 2012 (81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions). The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the 35 pending instruments to Parliament.

Papua New Guinea

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement made by the Government representative in June 2012 to the Conference Committee indicating that there had been progress in the initial preparation for the submission of the 18 instruments pending, but given the large number of instruments that had to be submitted to the competent authorities further consultations should take place. In the same way as the Conference Committee, the Committee urges the Government to comply with this constitutional obligation and to submit without delay to the National Assembly the 19 instruments adopted by the Conference at 11 sessions held between 2000 and 2012.

Peru

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes that the Government held an information seminar for various departments of the Executive on 6 November 2012 concerning the procedure to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the Congress of the Republic. The Committee recalls its previous observations and requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted for the submission to the Congress of the Republic of the remaining instruments adopted at the 84th, 88th and 90th Sessions of the Conference, and at the sessions held between 2002 and 2012.

Russian Federation

The Committee notes with interest that the ratification of Conventions Nos 173, 174 and of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), was registered in February and August 2012. The Committee invites the Government to provide the required information on the submission to the State Duma of the 13 instruments adopted by the Conference at eight sessions held between 2001 and 2012 (89th, 90th, 92nd, 95th (Recommendation No. 198), 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions).

Rwanda

Serious failure to submit. The Committee takes note of the communication received in May 2012 indicating the Government's intention to take measures so Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols are submitted to Parliament. The Committee asks the Government to report on the submission to the National Assembly of the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference at 17 sessions held between 1993 and 2012 (80th, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions). The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the 36 pending instruments to the National Assembly.

Saint Kitts and Nevis

Submission to the National Assembly. The Committee notes with interest that the ratification of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), was registered on 21 February 2012. It further notes the Government's communication, received in August 2012, indicating that the instruments adopted by the Conference were submitted to the Cabinet and that an official document will be sent to the ILO in the near future. The Committee recalls that the competent national authority should normally be the legislature, that is, in the case of Saint Kitts and Nevis, the National Assembly. The Committee therefore invites the Government to complete the submission procedure and provide the required information on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference at 13 sessions held between 1996 and 2012 (83rd, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions).

Saint Lucia

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the brief communication submitted by the Government in August 2012 indicating that the instruments will be provided to the new Minister for Labour for onward submission. The Committee recalls that, in accordance with article 19, paragraphs 5 and 6, of the Constitution of the Organization, Saint Lucia, as a Member of the Organization, has the obligation to submit to Parliament the remaining Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference from 1980 to 2012 (66th, 67th (Conventions Nos 155 and 156 and Recommendations Nos 164 and 165), 68th (Convention No. 157 and Protocol of 1982), 69th, 70th, 71st, 72nd, 74th, 75th, 76th, 77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions). The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure full compliance with the constitutional obligation to submit.

Saint Vincent and the Grenadines

The Committee recalls that, under the 1979 Constitution of Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, the Cabinet is the executive authority which has the responsibility for making final decisions on ratification and for determining any matter that is brought before the House of Assembly for legislative action. The Committee asks the Government to fulfil its obligations under article 19, paragraphs 5 and 6, of the ILO Constitution by submitting to the House of Assembly the 25 instruments (Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols) adopted by the Conference at 13 sessions held from 1995 to 2012 (82nd, 83rd, 85th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions).

Samoa

The Committee notes that, as of 7 March 2005, the Independent State of Samoa became a Member of the Organization. In accordance with article 19, paragraphs 5(a) and 6(a), of the ILO Constitution, the Office communicated to the Government the text of the Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the Conference at its 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions held between 2006 and 2012. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the submission of these instruments to the Legislative Assembly. It recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to help in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution relating to the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference to the Legislative Assembly.

Sao Tome and Principe

Serious failure to submit. The Committee regrets that the Government has not replied to its previous observation. The Committee recalls that the Government has not provided the required information on the submission to the competent authorities of 45 instruments adopted by the Conference between 1990 and 2012 (77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions). The Committee requests the Government to make every effort to fulfil the constitutional obligation of submission and recalls that the ILO is available to provide the necessary technical assistance to give effect to this essential obligation.

Seychelles

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement made by the Government representative at the Conference Committee in June 2012. In the same way as the Conference Committee, the Committee urges the Government to comply with this constitutional obligation and to quickly submit to the National Assembly the instruments adopted by the Conference at ten sessions held between 2001 and 2012.

Sierra Leone

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with serious concern that the Government has not replied to its previous comments. The Committee asks the Government to report on the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference in October 1976 (Convention No. 146 and Recommendation No. 154, adopted at the 62nd Session) and the instruments adopted between 1977 and 2012. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the 95 pending instruments to Parliament.

Solomon Islands

Serious failure to submit. ILO technical assistance. The Committee notes with interest that the ratification of six fundamental Conventions was registered in April 2012. The Committee recalls that, under the relevant provisions of article 19, paragraphs 5 and 6, of the ILO Constitution, the Members of the Organization have undertaken to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the authority within whose competence the matter lies for the enactment of legislation or other action. In the Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, the Governing Body indicated that the competent authority is the authority which, under the Constitution of each State, has the power to legislate or to take other action in order to implement Conventions and Recommendations. The competent national authority should normally be the legislature. Even in the case of instruments not requiring action in the form of legislation, it would be desirable to ensure that the purpose of submission, which is also to bring Conventions and Recommendations to the knowledge of the public, is fully met by submitting these instruments to the parliamentary body. The Committee therefore requests the Government to make every effort to comply with the constitutional obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1984 and 2012 to the National Parliament. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the 59 pending instruments to the National Parliament.

Somalia

Serious failure to submit. The Committee trusts that, when the national circumstances permit, the Government will provide information on the submission to the competent authorities with regard to the instruments adopted by the Conference between October 1976 and June 2012.

Sudan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement made by the Government representative at the Conference Committee in June 2012 indicating that the country had faced an exceptional situation in recent years owing to the separation of South Sudan. It also notes the Government's commitment to take all necessary measures to submit the pending instruments to the competent authorities. The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps to submit the 36 pending instruments adopted by the Conference between 1994 and 2012 to the National Assembly.

Suriname

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement made by the Government representative in June 2012 to the Conference Committee recalling that the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 90th to 96th Sessions were submitted to the Council of Ministers. The Government also indicated that it was now in the process of restarting the submission procedures. In the same way as the Conference Committee, the Committee invites the Government to indicate if the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 90th to 96th Sessions have been submitted to the National Assembly. It also invites the Government to provide information on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions (2010–12).

Syrian Arab Republic

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not replied to its previous observations. The Committee recalls that 43 of the instruments adopted by the Conference are still waiting to be submitted to the People's Council. The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to announce that the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 66th and 69th Sessions (Recommendations Nos 167 and 168) and at its 70th, 77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 90th (Recommendations Nos 193 and 194) 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions have been submitted to the People's Council.

Tajikistan

Serious failure to submit. The Committee recalls the information provided by the Government in July 2011 indicating that the HIV and AIDS Recommendation, 2010 (No. 200), has been translated into Tajik and was submitted to the relevant ministries and national committees for its approval. In August 2012, the Government supplied new detailed information on the activities carried out with the participation of the social partners and various governmental departments to promote Recommendation No. 200 and HIV/AIDS prevention in the workplace. The Committee recalls that only Conventions are communicated for ratification in conformity with article 19(5)(a) of the ILO Constitution. It further recalls that the Government is required to provide information on the submission to the Supreme Council (Majlisi Oli) of the instruments adopted by the Conference at 13 sessions held between October 1996 and June 2012 (84th, 85th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions). The Committee, in the same way as the Conference Committee, urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the 28 pending instruments to the Supreme Council (Majlisi Oli).

The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

The Committee notes with interest that the ratification of Conventions Nos 177, 181, 183 and 187 was registered on 3 October 2012. The Government also indicated in February 2012 that reviewing unratified international labour Conventions was one of the topics on the agenda of the Economic and Social Council and that this revision was done prior to its submission to the Assembly. The Committee welcomes this approach and hopes that the Government will provide the other information concerning the submission to the Assembly of the Republic (Soberanie) of the other Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the Conference at the sessions held between October 1996 and June 2012.

Togo

The Committee notes with interest that the ratification of Conventions Nos 81, 122, 129, 150, the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006), and Convention No. 187 was registered on 14 March 2012. The Committee refers to its previous comments and invites the Government to provide all the relevant information on the submission to the National Assembly of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 88th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 95th (Recommendation No. 198), 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions (2010–12).

Turkmenistan

Submission to the Mejlis (Parliament). The Committee notes with interest that, on 25 May 2012, the Government submitted to the Mejlis (Parliament) information on the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1994 and 2011. The Committee welcomes this process and hopes that the Government will provide regularly the required information on the obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the Mejlis (Parliament).

Uganda

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the statement made by the Government representative in June 2012 to the Conference Committee indicating that the Government compiled and summarized the Conventions adopted by the Conference since 1994 in order to submit them to the competent authorities. The Committee requests the Government to provide the required information on the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference at 17 sessions held between 1994 and 2012 (81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions). In the same way as the Conference Committee, it urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit the pending instruments to Parliament.

Ukraine

The Committee notes the Government's communication received in October 2012 indicating that the ministries and departments concerned are examining the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189), and its corresponding Recommendation (No. 201). In its previous observations, the Committee had already noted that the instruments adopted by the Conference between 2003 and 2007 were under examination by the executive authority. The Government further stated, just as it did in May 2009, that these instruments were not submitted to the Supreme Rada of Ukraine since no proposals were made with regard to their ratification.

The Committee recalls that, by virtue of the relevant provisions of article 19, paragraphs 5, 6 and 7, of the Constitution, the Members of the Organization have undertaken to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies for the enactment of legislation or other action. In the Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, the Governing Body indicated that the competent authority is the authority which, under the Constitution of each State, has the power to legislate or to take other action in order to implement Conventions and Recommendations. The competent national authority should normally be the legislature. Even in the case of instruments not requiring action in the form of legislation, it would be desirable to ensure that the purpose of submission, which is also to bring Conventions and Recommendations to the knowledge of the public, is fully met by submitting these instruments to the parliamentary body.

The Committee also notes that for many years the Government has provided information on the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference to the Supreme Rada. Submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference to the Supreme Rada does not imply any obligation for the Government to propose the ratification of a Convention or Protocol, or the application of a Recommendation. Governments have complete freedom as to the nature of the proposals to be made when submitting instruments to the competent authorities. Furthermore, the proposals to be made to the competent authority or authorities in connection with submission have to be the subject of consultation in accordance with the tripartite procedures required in Article 5(1)(b) of the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144), which has been ratified by Ukraine.

The Committee therefore requests that the Government provide all the information requested in the questionnaire at the end of the Memorandum on the submission to the Supreme Rada of Ukraine regarding the 12 instruments adopted at the 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions of the Conference (2003–12).

Uzbekistan

Submission to the Supreme Assembly (Oliy Majlis). The Committee notes with interest that, on 3 April 2012, the Government submitted to the Legislative Chamber of the Supreme Assembly (Oliy Majlis) information on the instruments adopted by the Conference between 1993 and 2011. Recommendation No. 202 was submitted to the Supreme Assembly on 13 September 2012. The Committee welcomes this progress and hopes that the Government will provide regularly the required information on the obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the Supreme Assembly.

Vanuatu

The Committee recalls that, as of 22 May 2003, Vanuatu became a Member of the Organization. It further recalls that the ratification by Vanuatu of the eight fundamental Conventions was registered in July 2006. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the submission to the Parliament of Vanuatu of the five Conventions and seven Recommendations adopted by the Conference at seven sessions held between 2003–12 (92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions). It recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office to help in achieving compliance with the obligations under article 19 of the Constitution relating to the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference to the Parliament of Vanuatu.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain points are being addressed directly to the following States: Afghanistan, Algeria, Argentina, Austria, Belgium, Benin, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Botswana, Brunei Darussalam, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Colombia, Cuba, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Eritrea, Finland, France, Gambia, Germany, Greece, Grenada, Guatemala, Guyana, Hungary, Iceland, Islamic Republic of Iran, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Luxembourg, Malawi, Malaysia, Republic of Maldives, Malta, Mexico, Mongolia, Montenegro, Myanmar, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Norway, Oman, Panama, Paraguay, Portugal, Qatar, San Marino, Senegal, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, Sweden, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Trinidad and Tobago, United Arab Emirates, Uruguay, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, Yemen, Zambia.

Appendices

Appendix I. Table of reports received on ratified Conventions as of 7 December 2012
(articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution)

Article 22 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization provides that “each of the Members agrees to make an annual report to the International Labour Office on the measures which it has taken to give effect to the provisions of the Conventions to which it is a party. These reports shall be made in such form and shall contain such particulars as the Governing Body may request”. Article 23 of the Constitution provides that the Director-General shall lay before the next meeting of the Conference a summary of the reports communicated to him by Members in pursuance of article 22, and that each Member shall communicate copies of these reports to the representative organizations of employers and workers.

At its 204th Session (November 1977), the Governing Body approved the following arrangements for the presentation by the Director-General to the Conference of summaries of reports submitted by governments under articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution:

- (a) the practice of tabular classification of reports, without summary of their contents, which has been followed for several years in respect of reports subsequent to first reports after ratification, should be applied to all reports, including first reports;
- (b) the Director-General should make available, for consultation at the Conference, the original texts of all reports received on ratified Conventions; in addition, photocopies of the reports should be supplied on request to members of delegations.

At its 267th Session (November 1996), the Governing Body approved new measures for rationalization and simplification.

Reports received under articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution appear in simplified form in a table annexed to the report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations; first reports are indicated in parentheses.

Requests for consultation or copies of reports may be addressed to the secretariat of the Committee on the Application of Standards.

Appendix IV. Summary of information supplied by governments with regard to the obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference to the competent authorities

Article 19 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization prescribes, in paragraphs 5, 6 and 7, that Members shall bring the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the International Labour Conference before the competent authorities within a specified period. Under the same provisions, the governments of member States shall inform the Director-General of the International Labour Office of the measures taken to submit the instruments to the competent authorities, and also communicate particulars of the authority or authorities regarded as competent, and of any action taken by them.

In accordance with article 23 of the Constitution, a summary of the information communicated in pursuance of article 19 is submitted to the Conference.

At its 267th Session (November 1996), the Governing Body approved new measures to rationalize and simplify proceedings. As a result, the summarized information appears in an appendix to the report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations.

The present summary contains the most recent information on the submission to the competent authorities of the HIV and AIDS Recommendation, 2010 (No. 200), adopted by the Conference at its 99th Session, and of the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189), and its corresponding Recommendation (No. 201), adopted by the Conference at its 100th Session. Some governments have also provided information on the submission of the Social Protection Floors Recommendation, 2012 (No. 202), adopted by the Conference at its 101st Session (June 2012). In addition, the present summary contains information supplied by governments with respect to earlier adopted instruments submitted to the competent authorities in 2012.

The summarized information also consists of communications which were forwarded to the Director-General of the International Labour Office after the closure of the 101st Session of the Conference (Geneva, June 2012) and which could not therefore be laid before the Conference at that session.

In the next report, the Appendix IV summary will contain information showing how far governments have progressed in the submission to the competent authorities of the Social Protection Floors Recommendation, 2012 (No. 202), adopted by the Conference at its 101st Session (June 2012).

Appendix V. Information supplied by governments with regard to the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities

(31st to 100th Sessions of the International Labour Conference, 1948-2011)

Note. The number of the Convention or Recommendation is given in parentheses, preceded by the letter "C" or "R" as the case may be, when only some of the texts adopted at any one session have been submitted. The Protocols are indicated by the letter "P" followed by the number of the corresponding Convention. When the ratification of a Convention was registered, that Convention and the corresponding Recommendation are considered as submitted.

Account has been taken of the date of admission or readmission of States Members to the ILO for determining the sessions of the Conference whose texts are taken into consideration.

The Conference did not adopt any Conventions or Recommendations at its 57th Session (June 1972), 73rd Session (June 1987), 93rd Session (June 2005), 97th Session (June 2008) and 98th Session (June 2009).
