“Many donors cannot appear paying for surveys because they would lose credibility. To give some examples: Pfizer Inc. would not sponsor surveys on health issues nor would Exxon pay for surveys on environmental issues. ... Journalists are very much attracted by whatever is new and easy to report ... When the name of Libertad and Desarrollo is linked to a survey, more credibility is given to its data and donors also see this.”

-- Alejandro Chafuen, former president of the Atlas Network.
